REBELS GAIN FIVE MILES IN DRIVE ON SANTANDER

Advance Along Coast, Aided by Two Vessels at Sea—Basques Digging in 12 Miles From Bilbao to Stop Insurgents.

ASTURIANS TRAP INVADING COLUMN

Dynamiters Inflict 150 Casualties in Ambush Near Valmaseda—Franco Renews Attack in Madrid Sector.

By the Associated Press.

HENDAYE, Franco-Spanish Border, June 26.—Insurgent Gen. Francisco Franco's troops pushed five miles farther along the coastal road from Bilbao toward Santander today in an attack supported by two of his cruisers, the Baleares and Canarias.

Reports received here said the advance was led by the Black Arrow brigade while the cruisers shelled retreating Basque soldiers from the sea.

Insurgents moved into the little village of Onton, about two and a half miles from Castro Urdiales, an important harbor town and their next big objective.

Another insurgent column operating inland and southwest of Bilbao was keeping up with the coastal advance. Troops occupied the villages of Sodupe and Gordejuela, two strategic technical positions commanding the approach to Valmaseda, about one-third of the way to Santander, which is 45 miles from Bilbao.

Basques Entrench 55,000 Men 12 Miles from Bilbao for Battle.

By the Associated Press.

SANTANDER, Spain, June 26.—Basque army leaders entrenched their 55,000 men in the Somorrostro Heights, 12 miles from Bilbao, today.

Determined to halt the insurgent columns that pushed them out of Bilbao, leaders said they would hold out until they were destroyed. Dynamite was given to all tank battalions, to wreck their machines should capture appear imminent.

The famous Asturian dynamite fighters ambushed an insurgent motorized column near Valmaseda. Basque commanders said the Asturians charged down a narrow defile, scattered the insurgents and inflicted 150 casualties.

Rebels Unsuccessful in Two Attacks Near Madrid.

By the Associated Press.

MADRID, June 26.—Insurgents launched two heavy but unsuccessful attacks on the Southern Madrid front today, apparently confirming reports that Gen. Franco was massing his men for a new drive against the capital.

Government commanders said the attacks, preceded by heavy artillery fire, apparently were intended to cut the highway to Valencia, temporary capital on the Mediterranean. Insurgents failed to sever the road in severe fighting last February. Since then the sector has been comparatively quiet.

Today's attacks were directed against Government positions on La Maranosa Mountain, south of the Tago river. Insurgent lossen in men and materials were reported to have been heavy Barcelona dispatches said a warship that shelled the Catalan coast June 24 had been identified as the insurgent cruiser Baleares. Earlier reports had said the ship appeared to be a foreign vessel.

Madrid was shelled again today but without serious damage.

PYTHON LOOSE 4 DAYS ON SHIP

Captain Ordered it Shot But Collector's Plea Saves It.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 26.—The passengers on the steamer Cingalese Prince weren't aware of it, but for four days a 28-foot python was loose on the ship while they were en route from Singapore. The ship arrived in Brooklyn today.

Capt. John Smith ordered his officers to shoot the giant reptile on sight. Heinrich Danisch, animal collector, pleaded for its life, and began searching the black hold. He finally found the python resting on a crossbeam, and with the help of the crew got it back in its box.

Tells Labor Delegation He Turned Down "Autocratic and Dictatorial" Plan—Rejects Their Request to Keep Mills Closed.

MISS PERKINS SAYS SHE 'MERELY SUGGESTED' THAT OHIO USE SUBPENA POWER

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 26.

SECRETARY OF LABOR PERKINS denied tonight she had suggested that Gov. Martin L. Davey of Ohio summon steel operators to a conference and keep them until they signed an agreement. In a statement issued through a nassistant, she said:

"I merely suggested to Gov. Davey, inasmuch as the Federal Steel Board reported it believed an adjustment of differences could be reached if the parties concerned sat down together, that the State of Ohio had the subpena power to bring all concerned into a joint conference and thus try out the board's proposal of attempting to reach a voluntary settlement by the conference method."

TWO ADMIT CRIME FOR WHICH ANOTHER MAN IS SERVING LIFE

Held at Denver; Waitress Identified Suspect Now in Prison as Attacker.

DENVER, June 26.—John A. Carroll, district attorney, said tonight a confession by two men exonerated Ernest Mattice, 33 years old, who was sentenced last January to two life terms for a criminal assault on Mrs. Margaret Cyzkosz, 22-year-old beer tavern waitress.

Carroll said Frank Neill, 25, and Ernest Alfred Parker, 24, convicted car thieves, made a signed confession of the attack of Mrs. Cyzkosz last October. Carroll said he would file criminal assault charges against both men.

Mrs. Cyzkosz, whose identification resulted in the confession of Mattice, wept in remorse for her mistake when she saw Neill and identified him as one of her two assailants, James E. Childers, Detective Captain, said.

Albanian Tribunal Decrees Death for Revolt; 4 Get Life Terms.

By the Associated Press.

ARGYROKASTRO, Albania, June 26.—Five rebels were condemned to death tonight by a special tribunal on charges of participating in the recent revolt. Four others were sentenced to life imprisonment and 56 persons given varying prison sentences.

A revolt broke out May 15 in Argyrokastro, in southern Albania, near the Greek border. Former Minister Efan Toto allegedly led the uprising. A Government communique May 26 announced the death of the ex-Minister in a skirmish and the end of the revolt.

COLUMBUS, O., June 26.—Gov. Martin L. Davey of Ohio told labor leaders tonight he had turned down flatly Secretary of Labor Perkins' "autocratic and dictatorial" plan for forcing a steel strike settlement.

Since the failure of her Mediation Board's peace efforts, Davey said Miss Perkins had asked him to keep the steel plants closed and to bring Tom Girdler and Frank Purnell to the State capital—"and keep them here until they signed an agreement."

Miss Perkins, he added, had suggested by telephone from Washington that he use the subpena power of the State Industrial Commission to bring the steel men to Columbus.

No Right to Close Plants.

"I have no right to keep plants closed except in case of riot," said the Governor, whose order to National Guardsmen to protect those employes wanting to work was responsible for the reopening of Youngstown plants yesterday.

"Secretary Perkins' suggestion would be in my judgment the exercise of the most autocratic and dictatorial powers ever attempted.

"In private life it would be kidnaping. Until the courts have decided that the companies have to sign contracts or agreements I have no right to take anyone and hold them.

Davey reviewed his efforts in attempting to bring about a peaceful settlement of the strike.

"Bad Temper" by Girdler.

"As far as Mr. Girdler is concerned I think he has shown bad temper and has hurt his position before the public," Davey added.

"The troops are there now for the purpose of maintaining law and order, and to protect the rights of those who want to go back to work."

"What we have done may be criticised as helping the companies," added the Governor, "but that was not the purpose.

"If the rights of pickets have been infringed it was contrary to my orders. As I see it government has to be impartial as long as that can be done."

Labor Group's Response.

The labor delegation, informed of Davey's decision, then adopted a resolution to "vigorously condemn Gov. Davey for his alignment with the steel autocrats."

It described the executive as a "low type politician who made promises and continually violated them."

The 20-member C I O committee representing steel men and mine workers had called on Gov. L. Davey, and bitterly protested against the use of National Guardsmen for what they described as "strike-breaking" purposes.

Lee Hall of Cleveland, Regional C I O Director, told Gov. Davey that the committee represented 30 industrial cities in Ohio and West Virginia. With the committee came 700 workers.

T. S. Stockdale of Canton, O. secretary of the Canton Federation of Labor, a member of the committee, said to the Governor:

"I represent 1500 union men in Stark County who consider that breaking of the strike threatens the entire labor movement throughout the nation."

'Troops Will Remain.'

"The troops will remain as long as it is necessary to preserve law and order, and to prevent rioting and bloodshed," Davey said. "We intend to protect strikers, non-strikers, civilians and everybody else.

Replying to Hall's question as to whether the plants would be closed, Davey said: "We have no powers to keep the plants closed. It would be a moral wrong to use that power even if we did have it. I'm not so sure but that the company could obtain a court order against me if I attempted to close the plants."

"Frankly," Davey told the Labor Committee, "You've got to marshal your forces and make them behave."

C I O Sues Gov. Davey to Bar Use Of National Guard.

Suit to enjoin Gav. Davey from using national guardsmen to protect men returning to their jobs in the steel strike area was filed today by attorneys for the Committee for Industrial Organization, in the United States District Court here. Judge Mell G. Underwood set the hearing for Thursday.

Carrington T. Marshall, former Ohio Chief Justice, represented the C I O.

The suit also requested that Gov. Davey and other officials show cause "for violating the Federal Constitution by depriving the citizens of free speech and assembly."

The suit seeks to restrain the defendants from "interfering with the rights of citizens concerning free speech" and "the rights to assemble peaceably, to picket in concerted action for mutual aid and protection and to travel in and upon high-

SCULPTOR ADMITS MURDERING MODEL AND TWO OTHERS

Robert Irwin, Sought Three Months in New York Apartment Deaths, Is Found in Chicago.

SAYS KILLINGS WERE "ACCIDENTAL"

Planned to Kill Sister of Veronica Gedeon Because She Had Married Another.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.
(Copyright, 1937.)

CHICAGO, June 26.—Robert Irwin, the sculptor who has been hunted throughout the country since last Easter Sunday for the murder of Veronica Gedeon, artist's model, her mother, and Frank Byrnes, a roomer, in their New York City apartment, surrendered at the office of the Chicago Herald and Examiner tonight.

Within the next few hours he confessed all three of the murders and made the additional statement that his original purpose was to kill Veronica's sister, Ethel, whom he loved and who had married another.

"I wanted to kill Ethel," the sculptor said, "because she was the dearest object in the world to me. I loved her and hated her.

Killings Were "Accidental."

"I dreamed of modeling her as if beheaded, with her head far back and the mouth open. If my plans had been carried out as they were made I would have killed her only. I did not wish to kill anybody else. The fact that I killed three others was accidental—I accidentally borrowed three lives."

He told the story in the most minute detail, describing each separate phase in each of the three deaths—a tragic narrative covering the whole of a night and ending with his own flight from the apartment house on the dawn of Easter.

Veronica's mother, Mrs. Joseph Gedeon, was the first to die, Irwin said.

Took Dog for a Walk.

"When I went to the house," he said, "there was nobody there, that is, no member of the Gedeon family. Mrs. Gedeon was the first to come home. She greeted me in a friendly way and asked me to take her little dog—a Peke—for a walk. I did so.

"I wanted to wait until Ethel came home. I had to make excuses for waiting. So I asked Mrs. Gedeon to let me draw a picture of her—and I did draw the picture, working as slowly as I could. I wanted to kill time. I don't know if it was a good picture or not—probably not, since I was not interested in it.

"I knew Mrs. Gedeon didn't want me to have anything to do with Ethel—and I wasn't sore about that. It was all right for her to think of me as just a bum from Greenwich Village. It's natural for a mother to be careful about her daughter. So for a long time I didn't even mention Ethel's name—I just kept drawing the picture, until Mrs. Gedeon was obviously tired and made it clear that she wanted me to leave. Finally I came out with it—I wanted to see Ethel, I told her, and wouldn't go until I had seen Ethel.

He Killed Mother.

"It was when I talked like that that Mrs. Gedeon turned on me. She said I was no good. She ordered me to get out. Her voice rose to a shout. And—I hit her—hit her with all the force I had.

"She fell down, screaming. And I was on her in a moment. I had my hands on her throat. All this time that Englishman, Byrnes was just a few feet away in his room. He could have done something. But he didn't. He must have heard her. She was putting up a tremendous fight. She was making enough noise, I thought, to waken the whole block. And I kept tightening my hands on her throat. I stopped her voice that way, but she was still thrashing about on the floor, fighting.

"I absolutely believe that I held her there by the throat for at least 20 minutes before the fight went out of her and she was still and dead."

Waited for Ethel.

"All this time the little dog had been there, not barking at all," he said resuming his story. "Can you imagine a dog like that? Those Pekes." He paused to light another cigarette.

"I hadn't done what I had come to do," he said. "I had to keep on waiting—for Ethel. She was the one I felt I must kill. I simply had to wait for her, to finish what I had planned."

"I had an ice pick with me. I had

WOMAN KILLED, THREE BURNED IN BOAT EXPLOSION

Mrs. William Wilson, 21, Bride of Dentist, Loses Life in Accident on Mississippi Shore.

CRAFT IGNITED AFTER TAKING ON GASOLINE

Brother, Sister-in-Law and Mother of Victim Reach Bank but Are Badly Injured.

Mrs. Marjorie Wilson, 21-year-old bride of three months, was burned to death, and her mother, brother and sister-in-law were seriously burned, when a 28-foot motor launch burst into flames at the North Shore boat harbor, 9400 Riverview drive, shortly before 6 p. m. yesterday.

The injured: Wayne K. Martin, 27, electrical engineer, 424 East Big Bend road, Kirkwood; his wife, Mrs. Lillian Martin, 23, and his mother, Mrs. Guy S. Martin, 47, 4026 Magnolia place. They were taken to City Hospital, where physicians said the condition of the two women was serious. Blood transfusions were administered to them late last night.

Mrs. Wilson, with her husband, Dr. William Wilson, a dentist, resided at the Magnolia place address. They were married in March. Mrs. Wilson attended Washington University last year and the University of Missouri the year before. She was a member of Delta Gamma sorority. The husband was graduated this month from St. Louis University School of Dentistry.

The boat was tied to a gasoline barge at the harbor and Martin, who purchased the craft two weeks ago, had just bought gasoline and stepped on the starter, when there was an explosion and, according to witnesses, the whole boat burst into flames.

Preston Kampmeyer, 3323 Chippewa street, suffered minor burns on the face and body when he dashed to the flaming vessel from his nearby sailboat and pushed several occupants into the shallow water. They waded or were assisted to shore by persons on the bank.

Going on Week's Trip.

Martin, the least seriously injured, told reporters at the hospital he and his party had just bought the gasoline preparatory to going on a week's trip up the Illinois River.

"There was a little water in the bottom of the boat, but I didn't realize there must have been gasoline there, too," he said. "After getting the gasoline, I went to the hold and started the engine. Flames seemed to spring up all over at once. I jumped out of the hold and tried to push the three women off the boat, and then I jumped to escape the flames.

"When I came up I saw my mother in the water, and she had fallen over. I helped her to the bank, and saw my wife there. I didn't know then what had happened to Marjorie."

Trapped on Burning Boat.

Mrs. Wilson was unable to leave the boat and her body, burned beyond recognition, could not be removed until the flames subsided. The launch burned to the water's edge and fell apart.

Harry J. Riemann, proprietor of the harbor, said Martin had worked on the boat recently, and that he had warned Martin about using an inflammable varnish remover in cleaning the interior. The boat, named "Done Workin'," was about 30 years old, and cost Martin $225, Riemann said.

Kampmeyer, a 26-year-old chemist, said he was seated in his boat with a woman companion, on the opposite side of the gasoline barge from Martin's boat, when the explosion "nearly knocked me out of my seat."

Clad only in shorts, Kampmeyer said he ran across the barge and jumped into the burning boat. "A woman was standing in the boat, screaming, and I pushed her into the water," he related. "She waded the 10 feet to shore and ran up the hill, screaming, 'Oh, my baby.' Her clothing was on fire.

"Then I saw another woman with her hair in flames. I ducked her head in the water, grabbed her hair and pushed her overboard. Then I had to jump."

Rail Wage Parley Discontinued.

WASHINGTON, June 26.—Representatives of principal railways and the 14 non-operating brotherhoods discontinued negotiations today without reaching an agreement on demands for a 20-cents-an-hour wage increase. The labor representatives said there would be a meeting of general chairmen of the brotherhoods in Chicago Friday for a report. The negotiations have been in progress since June 2.

BALTIMORE WOMAN MISSING FROM CHESAPEAKE STEAMER

Her Coat Found on Deck; Tanker Reports Sighting a Body in Bay.

BALTIMORE, June 26.—Mrs. Myrtle F. Kerngood, 47 years old, of Baltimore, disappeared today from the Chesapeake Bay Steamer City of Norfolk and was believed to have drowned in the Bay.

Some time after her disappearance was discovered, Capt. Oscar Christensen of the tanker Panamoco reported it had sighted the body of a white woman off Seven Foot Knoll, but searching boats failed to find it.

The woman's husband, Allen Kerngood, button manufacturer, told police she disappeared this morning before the ship docked here after its run from Norfolk. They booked passage last night.

He said Mrs. Kerngold, who was in poor health became restless and they arose at 4 a. m. to get some coffee.

Kerngood said they returned to their cabin and he fell asleep. Awaking shortly, he said, he discovered his wife was gone. A search disclosed only her coat lying on deck.

BRIGHTER COLORS ARE ORDERED FOR MOSCOW AUTOMOBILES

MOSCOW, June 26.—Smarter automobiles have been ordered for Moscow to brighten up the streets.

The order barring all old cars from the streets by July 15 has been supplemented with further instructions to the automobile factories to apply various colored paints to new motor cars. Heretofore all cars have been painted black.

SOVIET FLYERS LEAVE CHICAGO

Due to Arrive in Washington This Morning.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, June 26.—Three Russian flyers who flew non-stop from Moscow to Vancouver, Wash., were en route to Washington, D. C., tonight after being guests of honor at a celebration here. They arrived from San Francisco this morning.

The trio, Pilot Valeri Chekalov, Co-Pilot George P. Baibukov and Navigator Alexander V. Beliakov, accompanied by Alexander A. Troyanovsky, Soviet ambassador to the United States, were greeted by a crowd which gave the clenched fist Soviet salute and sang the "Internationale." Later they toured the city before departing. They were scheduled to arrive in Washington at 8:45 a. m. tomorrow.

BORROWS DEPUTY'S KEY AND KILLS MAN IN JAIL

Eminence (Mo.) Man's Daughter Had Eloped With Prisoner.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

EMINENCE, Mo., June 26.—Everett Counts, 40 years old, procured a key to the Shannon County jail here this afternoon and shot and killed Miller Crane, 25, sweetheart of Counts' 16-year-old daughter, Nadine.

Crane was being held in jail as a result of his attempt to elope Friday with Counts' daughter. The two were overtaken at Bagnell Dam, and the girl returned to her home, while Crane was held pending charges.

Late today Counts, who apparently had been brooding over the affair, sent word to Deputy Sheriff George Schultz that he wanted to "talk things over" with Crane. Schultz, who was busy at his beer tavern, sent the jail key to Counts by a boy.

No officer accompanied Counts when he entered the jail, and Crane was the only prisoner. A few minutes later, Counts emerged from the jail, locked the door and went to a barber shop. He told the barber he had "had some trouble with" Crane. Schultz was summoned, and he and others entered the jail and found Crane dead. He had been shot in the heart.

Counts surrendered, and was questioned by Prosecuting Attorney L. B. Shuck, who said no charge had been placed against him. The Coroner, Dr. W. T. Eudy, deferred the inquest until Monday.

Crane, a well driller, came here from Central Missouri.

O'MALLEY ORDERED TO RETURN $250,000 INSURANCE DEPOSIT

Federal Judge Rules Receivers of Kansas Company Should Have Securities.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., June 26.—United States District Judge Albert L. Reeves today ordered R. E. O'Malley, State Superintendent of Insurance, to return approximately $250,000 in securities of the Federal Reserve Life Insurance Co. of Kansas to ancillery receivers here.

The company is in Federal receivership in Kansas; and the securities now in O'Malley's possession were deposited with him by the United States Reserve Insurance Corporation, a Missouri concern.

Today's action followed a series of court maneuvers during which O'Malley contended the deposits were made for protection of Missouri policyholders of the United States Reserve.

LABOR BOARD CITES FORD CO. FOR BREAKING WAGNER ACT

Charges Brutal Assault by Motor Firm's Agents on C I O Men — Executives Summoned to Answer Complaint.

HEARING SET FOR JULY 6 AT DETROIT

Threats and Acts of Violence, Circulation of Handbills, Discharge of Union Sympathizers Also Alleged.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

DETROIT, June 26.—Charging "brutal" physical assault by company agents on union workers, the National Labor Relations Board cited the Ford Motor Co. today for violations of the National Labor Relations Act.

Ford executives were summoned to appear at an N L R B hearing in Detroit July 6 to answer the charges.

On the record of these hearings, the N L R B will make findings and give final decision and consequent orders for or against the company.

The charges against Ford marked the first time N L R B has made any formal findings against a company of the automobile industry.

Previously, C I O strikes against General Motors, Chrysler and others, have resulted in signed agreements without NLRB action. Ford has announced a policy directly opposed to signing with the C I O.

The charges were filed first by the United Automobile Workers of America, a part of John L. Lewis' Committee for Industrial Organization. They were investigated by the N L R B's Detroit chief, Frank H. Bowen, who said he found them true and issued today's citation.

Board's Specific Charges.

As listed by the citation, the specific charges lodged by the NLRB against Ford are:

1. Physical assaults by Ford agents on union representatives.
2. Threats and acts of violence against union sympathizers during the last four months.
3. The circulation at River Rouge of a handbill for employe signature.
4. The support, later rescinded, of the Ford Brotherhood of America, Inc.
5. The discharge or lay-off over the last three months of many employes because of their union membership or sympathy with labor organization.
6. Use of propaganda by the company against workers' self-organization.

Statement by Board.

Physical assault was charged on May 26, during the early efforts of the U A W A to organize the Ford workers. The official statement of the board and covering this phase said:

"On May 26," it is stated in the lengthy and detailed citation drafted by Bowen, "Ford agents made malicious and brutal assaults upon U A W A representatives who were peaceably gathering near the River Rouge plant for the purpose of distributing union literature.

More than this, the statement asserted that Ford representatives also forcibly interfered with newspaper photographers by seizing their cameras and notes and by pursuing them on the public highways.

Today's citation climaxed about six weeks of work by N L R B investigators in Detroit. Its vigor in charging law violations has been exceeded by only one other citation of the board, that in the case of the Remington-Rand Co.

If Charges Stand Up.

Sharply, throughout the report ran criticism of Ford tactics, of Ford domination of employes, and of unfair labor practices as interpreted under the new labor law. If substantiated by the board after the hearing, the law permits the

STRIKERS QUIET AS OHIO STEEL MILLS OPEN WITH TROOPS ON GUARD

Youngstown Sheet & Tube and Republic Co. Report 11,800 Out of 18,000 Employes Have Returned to Work.

FIGURES DISPUTED BY C I O LEADERS

Soldiers Patrolling Plants Keep Crowds From Forming — Military Passes Demanded of Anyone Near Gates.

By the Associated Press.

YOUNGSTOWN, O., June 26. — "The strike is over, so far as we are concerned," said Roy Leventry, district manager of Republic Steel, tonight. He said one blast furnace had made a cast early today, the first production in the plant since May 26.

After the night shift at Youngstown had gone to work peacefully at 7 p. m., officers of the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. and the Republic Steel Corporation said about 11,800 out of a total of 18,000 employes had reported for duty with the day and night shifts.

The men returned to work under the protection of national guardsmen sent here originally by Gov. Martin L. Davey to prevent the opening of the steel plants. He rescinded this order later and directed them to protect workers. They guarded plant entrances as the men returned.

Troops on patrol duty within a block of the entrances kept everyone moving. Military passes were demanded of anyone standing near the gates.

Gov. Davey has not indicated how long the troops are to stay. They are not expected to withdraw at least until the middle of next week.

Strike Spokesmen Skeptical.

Strike spokesmen shrugged at company claims that normal operations were being resumed, asserting that the back-to-work movement showed little success in several points along the 150-mile strike front, extending from Johnstown, Pa., to Warren, O.

"A definite check shows there has been no rush back to work," said a union statement, issued at Warren. "A great many men who have been in Republic Steel's plant have joined the ranks of the strikers."

Philip Murray, chairman of the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee, declared at Pittsburgh "the strike will be won." He said 14,000 of the 100,000 men made idle by the strike called May 26, were at work in the mills this morning. "The corporations," said Murray, "are disappointed at the response."

Picket lines were small and quiet all along the Ohio-Pennsylvania strike front, and the day passed without a recorded instance of violence.

Mediator McGrady Remains.

After the failure of its efforts, Assistant Secretary of Labor Edward F. McGrady of the Federal Mediation Board remained at the board's Cleveland headquarters. He said he would stay indefinitely "to keep in close touch" with the strike and to "be available to both sides if called upon." Lloyd K. Garrison, dean of the University of Wisconsin Law School, and Chairman C. P. Taft returned to their homes. At Cincinnati Taft was quoted as saying he planned to start for Europe Wednesday.

The board failed to arrange a settlement after Republic, Inland, Bethlehem and Youngstown Sheet & Tube rejected its appeal for a man-to-man round table conference with C I O leaders and declared they would not deal with Lewis' "irresponsible" union.

Bethlehem Steel Resumes; Mass Meeting Today at Johnstown.

By the Associated Press.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., June 26.—The Bethlehem Steel Corporation tonight resumed operations under peaceful conditions at its Cambria works, where a strike has been under way for two weeks.

The strike was called by the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee to bolster a walkout on the Bethlehem subsidiary railroad, the Conemaugh and Black Lick. The issue was the refusal of Bethlehem to sign labor contracts.

Capt. Wiliaim Clark, commander of State police, said reports from his men on duty at the plant's seven gates indicated between 4000 and 5000 men reutrned to their jobs. Cambria normally employs 15,000.

Persistent rumors were current that a march of coal miners will start tomorrow on Johnstown, as a sympathy move. It was such a threat a week ago that caused Gov. George H. Earle of Pennsylvania to intervene and close the Cambria works. He lifted the order effective at 7 a. m. yesterday, saying the emergency in Johnstown had passed.

James Mark, strike leader, declared, however, he had received assurances the United Mine Workers would throw their strength to the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee, in an effort to force Bethlehem to sign. He said a mass meeting would be held here tomorrow at 4:30 p. m., by coal miners and striking steel workers. He made no estimate of the number expected for the meeting, but said miners from all parts of Western Pennsylvania have been invited.

Mark said an attempt would be made to have Philip Murray, chairman of the S W O C, come from Pittsburgh, to address the workers.

Sidney B. Evans, speaking for the company, said today: "We have 12 open hearths already in operation out of 16 in use when the strike was called June 11." There are 21 open hearths in the works, which stretches for eight miles along the Conemaugh River.

Non-strikers ignored pickets as they passed through the gates. Most of them came by automobile. State police estimated 409 cars carried more than 1500 workers through the Franklin gates.

Murray, in Statement, Says He Expects Strike to Be Won.

By the Associated Press.

PITTSBURGH, June 26.—Philip Murray, chairman of the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee, declared today "we have every reason to believe that the strike in four of the nation's big independent steel mills will be won."

In a formal statement Murray said reports from every plant affected by the strike shows approximately 14,000 "of the 100,000 steel workers affected by the present strike" were at work in the mills this morning. Murray said that these 14,000 were composed "mostly of superintendents, foremen, office workers and other confidential employes not eligible to hold membership in the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers."

The statement continued: "The corporations are distinctly disappointed and obviously disgruntled because there was not a more ready response on the part of the workers to return to work when the gates were thrown open yesterday and today. The situation from every standpoint of our organization is exceptionally good. We have every reason to believe that the strike will be won. The complete solidarity of our people must be maintained. Every possible effort will be put forth by the officers and members of our organization to lend support of every kind to the members of our organization affected by this strike."

C I O Wants to Know if City Officials Own Steel Stock.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 26.—William D. Leider, an attorney for the C I O, said today that Republic Steel Corporation and Bethlehem Steel Corporation had refused to disclose whether or not city officials of Youngstown, O., and Johnstown, Pa., were among their stockholders.

Requests for the information were made by Florence Glantz. Republic and Bethlehem Steel refused her request on the ground that she had not been a stockholder for six months.

Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. complied with the request, Leider said. Examination of its books showed the principal officials of the city of Youngstown were not stockholders.

Mills in Chicago District Considering Reopening.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, June 26.—The Inland steel Corporation and the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. announced today they would resume operations in the Chicago area if and when civil authorities furnished "adequate protection" for employes who want to return to work.

Wilfred Sykes, assistant to the president of the Inland company, in a statement said:

"In response to the insistent demand of thousands of our men, Inland Steel Co. has had actively under consideration today plans for reopening the plants (at Indiana Harbor). At the request, however, of Gov. M. Clifford Townsend of Indiana, the company will withhold further announcement until 4 p. m. Monday."

"You can tell the world we'll resist any attempt to open these plants."

Indiana Harbor is a part of East Chicago, Ind., a city of 60,000 whose Mayor, Andrew Rooney, announced he would try to arrange a conference of C I O and independent unions and the companies.

Since the strike started May 26, only about 800 men, who operate coke ovens to supply gas to the city of East Chicago, have been permitted inside the Inland and Youngstown plants. Pickets continued to patrol the gates.

MISSOURI WHEAT CROP BADLY DAMAGED BY BLACK RUST

Wet Weather in Western Part of State Causes Farmers Heavy Losses.

JEFFERSON CITY, June 26. — Black Rust, the wet weather enemy of wheat, has made serious inroads on Missouri's potentially bountiful wheat crop.

Jewell Mays, Missouri Commissioner of Agriculture, said today inspectors who traveled over the State reported the rust attack was "perhaps the worst in the history of the State."

Reports of damage came chiefly from Western Missouri, but also from Monroe, Cooper and other central counties.

A. J. Dinsdale, Nodaway County Extension Agent at Maryville, estimated after a personal tour of the county that rust would cut production at least 50 per cent and mean a loss to farmers of nearly a half million dollars.

STRIKE OF CANADIAN INDIANS

Money and Food Refused in Protest Against Agent.

FORT RESOLUTION, Northwest Territory, June 26. — (Canadian Press.)—Treaty Indians of the Great Slave Lake area 600 miles north of Edmonton were on strike today, contending the Indian agent had imposed too severe restrictions upon them.

They refused to accept an annual payment of $5 from the Canadian Government and issues of flour, tea and bacon as offered by the agent, Dr. J. E. Amyot. Led by their chiefs, members of the Yellowknife, Dog Ribs and other tribes asserted they would not accept until another Government official came to handle the payment.

First Order for Troops.

Gov. Davey ordered out the National Guard at the request of C I O officials last Monday, when the Republic Steel Corporation and the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co.—two of the four independent steel producers involved in the seven-state strike—announced they would attempt to reopen their plants Tuesday.

In its request for troops, the C I O said that unless the back-to-work movement was halted, there was grave danger of bloodshed.

The collapse of the Federal mediators' efforts at Cleveland Thursday was followed by this order from Gov. Davey: "Those who want to return to their employment shall enjoy the privilege without being molested. The right to work is sacred. The right to strike is equally valid. Those who wish to remain on strike are certainly entitled to do so, and to continue any and all lawful practices."

King and Queen Watch 260 Planes Parade Across Sky in Annual British Show.

HENDON, England, June 26.—England's Royal Air Force, flying in formation, darkened nearly a square mile of sky today as royalty watched the annual "Ascot of the Air" display.

Mock sky fights and bombing raids thrilled 170,000, including King George, Queen Elizabeth and the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester. The Duke and Duchess of Kent flew to the field in their own plane.

Crack pilots tied planes together and stunted. Formation flying brought out 260 planes in 26 squadrons, with bombers in the center, flanked by lighter pursuit planes.

Returning Congressmen divulged the details. What one of them called a "transcript" of the proceedings said that after the President's admission to the club for life without payment of dues had been moved, Representative Smith (Dem.), Virginia, moved to amend the membership to be effective "only during good behavior."

LINER RESCUES CREW FORCED OFF BURNING SHIP

President Pierce Saves 40 Men Who Abandoned Freighter in Atlantic — Proceeding to New York.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 26.—Globe Wireless reported tonight that the crew of 40 men of the burning British freighter Sandgate Castle had been rescued far out in the Atlantic Ocean by the S. S. President Pierce, which was proceeding to New York.

The Sandgate Castle, swept by fire, was abandoned and reported to the coast guard as dangerous to navigation, the radioed reports from the President Pierce said.

The first lifeboat from the stricken ship was picked up, and its occupants transferred safely aboard the rescue ship, at 11:35 p. m. and rescue of the remaining boats followed shortly, the message said.

Earlier, reports from Mackay Radio said the President Pierce had reached the burning ship at 9:39 p. m. and was preparing to pick up the first lifeboat.

Radio operators of Globe wireless gathered the Sandgate Castle had been virtually destroyed by the fire which was reported to have broken out amidships.

The crew of the burning ship reported they were abandoning the vessel at 11:55 a. m., after an S O S had been sent.

The President Pierce, on its way from Marseilles to New York, speeded to the freighter's position 350 miles North, Northeast of Bermuda and 650 miles Southeast of New York.

The Sandgate Castle's S O S said there was fire between decks, and wireless operators gathered from messages relayed later that the crew left the vessel in fear of oil in the cargo.

The freighter's cargo was not listed as oil, however, but as general cargo on its clearance papers. It is owned by the Union Castle Mail Steamship Co., Ltd., of London, and left New York for Capetown, South Africa, on June 22.

Labor Board Cites Ford Co. As Wagner Act Violator

N L R B to issue orders calling on the automobile maker to cease and desist from such tactics, to reinstate employes who have been discharged for union activities, and to pay them back wages for lost time.

Dealing with other charges in detail, the formal statement of the board had this to say of them:

"It (Bowen's citation) states that the company (Ford Motor Co.) for several months past has circulated to employes, and to the public generally, propaganda holding labor organizations up to scorn and contempt, and that it has warned its employes not to join such organizations.

"The handbill, a 'vote of confidence,' said to have been circulated at the River Rouge plant early in June, bears the names of a committee of five employes. Spaces on each handbill are provided for 40 signatures to the following sentiments:

"'We, the following employes of the Ford Motor Co., wish to take this means of voluntarily expressing our complete confidence and agreement with the policies of Mr. Henry Ford.

"'Furthermore, it is our hope that these policies shall be continued in the future as they have in the past; that is, without interference or hindrance from any source whatsoever.'

Solicitation of Members.

"Also in early June occurred the aleged domination of an employe organization. It is stated in the complaint that River Rouge employes were solicited, with the consent of the companyy and upon working time, for membership in the Ford Brotherhood of America, Inc. Shortly thereafter, the company announced its intention to investigate the organization, and on June 15 published a statement that the brotherhood had been disbanded at company request."

In its closing phrases, the N L R B statement named more than 30 persons which the complaint charged the Ford company discharged because of union activity, three of them from the Highland Park plant, the rest from the great River Rouge plant. These included:

Alphonse Kuzulis, Percy Llewellyn, Jack Leis, John Pirosko, Fred Nygard, John Schipper, Emil Tomkow, Jacob Winsiewski, Joseph Nierotoko, George Onnela, Martin Jense, Clarence A. Fleming, Richard Weyhing, Elmer Mackie, Thaddeus Radke, Ray Onnela, Alfred Onnela, Birtus C. Hall, Hector F. Manseau, Herbert C. Mehl, Gabriel Babaila, John Barron, Michael Dragon, Leo J. Krugh, Joseph V. Railey, John Cwikiel, Fred Gulliksen, George B. Zubick, Guiseppe Gregario, Joseph Galusky, Joseph Gutierrez, Raymond Jewell (laid off), Clifford Sheldon and John J. Dovey.

Of these, the statement said:

"Membership or interest in the United Automobile Workers, or a refusal to sign the 'vote of confidence,' is alleged as the cause of the discharges, which began in February and have continued into this month.

OHIO TOWN PARTLY FLOODED; ONE PERSON IS DROWNED

National Guardsmen Help Men Patrol Embankment Holding Back Waters at Bellevue.

By the Associated Press.

BELLEVUE, O., June 26. — An Ohio National Guard unit was detailed tonight to aid workmen patroling a railroad embankment which kept a huge lake formed by flood waters from pouring in on this already partially inundated town of 6000. One person has been drowned.

Company C, 148th Infantry, was dispatched from nearby Clyde under the command of Capt. C. R. Clark and the 43 men on arrival took positions along the Wheeling and Lake Erie Railroad embankment. At least 1000 additional homes would be affected if the embankment broke.

One house was burned in one of several fires which broke out in the town, about half of which is under water to the depth of four feet in some places.

SPANISH FREIGHTER SUNK BY SUBMARINE

Five of Loyalist Crew Lost — Nationality of Attacking Craft Not Disclosed.

By the Associated Press.

VALENCIA, Spain, June 26. — The Spanish merchant vessel Cabo Palos, laden with foodstuffs, was reported tonight to have been sunk by a submarine off Point Ifach with the loss of five members of the crew.

Forty-four survivors, including a woman who was aboard as a nurse, were taken to Alicante by another ship after they had drifted for six hours in lifeboats.

The steamer was sunk at dawn today. Point Ifach is approximately 60 miles south of Valencia.

Capt. Manuel Hoyds reported the submarine appeared unexpectedly between his ship and the coast and, despite his efforts to get away, fired a torpedo which struck the vessel. He said it sank in five minutes.

The Government made no immediate announcement of evidence as to the nationality of the submarine but it has repeatedly asserted the Spanish insurgents have no undersea craft of their own.

Survivors were ordered to proceed to Valencia to make full reports on the incident.

NORMAN THOMAS ASSAILS 'DICTATORSHIP OF GIRDLERS'

Says Republic Steel Head 'Proved His Willingness for Police to Resort to Bloodshed.'

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 26. — Norman Thomas said tonight that Tom Girdler, chairman of the Republic Steel Corporation, had "proved his willingness for police and private guards to resort to bloodshed in order that he may indulge his right of defiance."

This, said Thomas, and not the violence of the workers, "was responsible for the Chicago massacre and other tragedies."

The statement, in behalf of the Socialist party's National Affairs Committee, said "the manufacture of steel is a great social enterprise which ought not to be entrusted to the dictatorship of the Girdlers at the expense of the citizens. . . . It is only through agreements with an industrial union that order and democracy and industry can be advanced."

ATTORNEY SIEGAL INDICTED, ACCUSED OF EMBEZZLEMENT

BASED ON COUNT IN DISBARMENT SUIT

Lawyer Admitted Using Money From Sale of Bonds—Limitations Statute Nearly Out.

The grand jury yesterday indicted Edward I. Siegal, attorney against whom a disbarment suit is pending, on a charge of embezzling $20,000 from his former stenographer, Mrs. Scerial Thompson, and her mother, Mrs. Hulda Karch, widow of Congressman Charles A. Karch of East St. Louis.

The indictment was filed in Circuit Judge David Murphy's court immediately after it had been voted. A bench warrent for Siegal's arrest will be issued tomorrow.

The grand jury acted just in time to prevent the three-year statute of limitations from applying in the case. If it had waited longer, no prosecution could have been instituted, as the transaction on which the indictment is based occurred June 27, 1934.

The offense charged is punishable by a prison term of two to seven years.

Testimony at Bar Hearings.

Siegal, at hearings before the bar disciplinary committee which filed the suit to disbar him, admitted he obtained about $28,000 in Government bonds from Mrs. Thompson and her mother by representing that he would sell the bonds and invest the proceeds more profitably for them.

Instead, he admitted, he used the money for his own purposes, and was unable to repay a balance of about $25,000 due Mrs. Thompson and her mother. At the time of the transactions, Siegal told the bar committee, he was hard pressed by creditors, some of whom had unsatisfied judgments against him.

After obtaining the bonds from Miss Karch, as she was then, Siegal said he sold them and used the money to pay debts and expenses. He persuaded the women to accept his note for the money due them.

Advanced Them Money.

In the following months, he advanced money to Mrs. Karch and her daughter from time to time. After the daughter married in November, 1934, her husband, an attorney of Harrisburg, Ill., got $2300 of the money back from Siegal. Thompson also obtained Siegal's note for $10,900. This, with the $15,000 note previously given, covered the balance than due to Mrs. Thompson and her mother.

Siegal is 35 years old, and resides at 6216 Northwood avenue. At the time of the alleged transactions he had offices in the Ambassador building.

The indictment is grounded on one of seven counts in the disbarment suit, in which the testimony given by Siegal and others is now before Circuit Judge Charles B. Williams for consideration.

MOSQUITO NUISANCE IN EAST SIDE AREAS

Tormented Communities Lack Funds to Drain Off Breeding Places.

Unable to meet the cost of a sewer connection with the new Lansdowne sanitary trunk line and surrounded by swamps well-filled by heavy rains, residents of the Lansdowne section of East St. Louis and the villages of Washington Park and Fairmont City have been tormented by clouds of mosquitoes recently.

F. C. Bishopp, of the United States Department of Agriculture, who has surveyed the district, said the sewage in open drainage ditches was largely responsible for the plague. The cost of connecting to the $334,000 sewer, built with a PWA loan and grant, as fixed by the East Side Levee Board, was considered prohibitive and the communities have been unable to finance lateral sewers.

Sewage contaminated lowland was said by Bishopp to be swarming with mosquitoes. Cesspools without proper covers, he added, also provided breeding places.

Stagnant water in Cahokia Creek and Indian Lake, and the parts of Horseshoe Lake heavily grown with vegitation also were cited by Bishopp.

Officials of the WPA and the East Side Levee District are taking emergency measures and said they hoped to devise a permanent plan for mosquito eradication. More than 100 WPA employes are spraying oil in swamps, cutting weeds and digging a one-mile drainage ditch along Schoenberger Creek.

Complaints have been received that spraying the swamps has driven more mosquitoes into residential districts. As the life of a mosquito averages but three or four weeks and spraying is expected to reduce the number hatched, WPA officials expect relief soon.

DU PONT-ROOSEVELT WEDDING STORY IN PHOTOGRAPHS

Father of Bride-Elect Arranges for Pictorial Record to Present to Pair.

WILMINGTON, Del., June 26.—Jay Te Winburn, one of New York's society photographers, has been engaged by Eugene du Pont to make a photographic history of the wedding day of his daughter, Ethel, who will become the bride of Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr., Wednesday.

Winburn will begin with the bride in her wedding finery, leaving her home on the arm of her father. He will take one picture inside the church just as Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Roosevelt Jr. leave the altar, and then a picture of the President kissing his new daughter-in-law, and more pictures of the relatives and intimate friends of the bridal pair at the reception.

All the pictures will go into an elaborate, leather note-book which the bride's father has presented the young pair. In addition there will be another note-book of newspaper clippings about the wedding.

Winburn will ride to the church in the same car with the bride and her father. After the ceremony is over he will be in the front seat of the car that will carry the bride and bridegroom to the du Pont home.

MAYOR UNDECIDED ON SIGNING FOUR SPECIAL TAX BILLS

He Says His Course Could Be Influenced by Result of Campaign on Delinquencies.

Mayor Dickmann told reporters yesterday he would defer action on the four special tax bills passed Friday by the Board of Aldermen and that his course "could be" influenced by the results of the current campaign to collect delinquent taxes.

The four special tax bills, estimated to yield $1,950,000, were enacted as a step toward raising more than $3,000,000 the city will need to wipe out last year's $2,017,590 deficit, provide $1,000,000 or more for relief in the current year, and $100,000 to balance the budget for this year.

The Mayor would not say whether he would approve or veto the bills. He said he was opposed, in general, to special taxes, but if the needed revenue could not be found elsewhere, special taxes would have to be levied unless the city is to curtail its services.

Has 20 Days to Decide.

After the bills are presented to him the Mayor will have 20 days to decide whether to approve or veto them and if he should not act within that period they would become law without this signature. The Mayor indicated, however, that he would dispose of the bills before the Board of Aldermen reconvenes July 8.

In connection with the delinquent tax collection campaign, Collector William F. Baumann announced yesterday that his office had compiled a list of 100 individuals and corporations, owing a total of about $2,000,000, and had ordered the compilation of a list of all owing bills of $1000 or more, with a view of making a more intensive effort, by telephone and personal solicitation, to collect the larger bills.

Baumann said he had no intention of singling out any individual or group in his campaign, but thought it a good plan to concentrate on the larger bills. He emphasized, however, that his primary interest was in the collection of all delinquent taxes, regardless of the amount of the individual bill.

Remission of Penalties.

The delinquent tax collection campaign has gained impetus from the present remission of penalties. Collections from June 10, when the law remitting penalties became effective, including those of yesterday, totaled $1,011,341. For the 12 months of 1936 delinquent tax collections totaled $5,060,995.

About half of the delinquent taxes collected go to the city's general revenue fund, the balance chiefly to the schools and State. Outstanding delinquent taxes in St. Louis total more than $14,000,000.

The 100 per cent waiver of penalties will expire next Wednesday. Seventy-five per cent of penalties will be remitted on back taxes paid in July and August; 50 per cent in September and October; and 25 per cent in November and December.

Three Opposed All Four.

Each of the four special tax bills had an overwhelming majority in the Board of Aldermen, but it is supposed that if the Mayor should veto the bills, his action would be sustained, in view of his strong following in the board.

Aldermen Otto L. Lietchen, Nick Reidy and Whitelaw Terry voted against all four of the special tax bills. Alderman George A. Byrne joined them in opposing the tax on admissions to theaters and sports events, and William J. Warnick voted with them against the tax on advertising receipts.

Chairman Allan E. Petersen of the Legislation Committee chided Terry for voting against the bills, asserting that he had pledged himself to support them. The debate brought out what had not been known before, that 25 Aldermen, at a caucus in Mayor Dickmann's office June 11, had pledged themselves to support the bills. Despite that action the Legislation Committee went through with the formality of conducting public hearings at which opponents of the new taxes were heard.

Terry said his opposition was intended as a public protest against the general tendency to increase taxes. Lietchen reminded the Aldermen he had announced his opposition at the caucus. Reidy did not attend the caucus.

Five Aldermen Absent.

Five Aldermen were absent from the session at which the board passed the tax bills. They were Leroy Couplin, Gregory V. Murray, John J. O'Connor, Charles Routledge, and Lawrence P. Walsh.

The proposed admission tax would be 1 cent on tickets costing up to 75 cents up to 10 cents on tickets costing more than $4. It would carry with it repeal of the license tax on theaters and of the 5 per cent levy on gross receipts of boxing and wrestling promoters. The yield, roughly estimated, would be $500,000 a year.

Another $500,000 would come from the ½ cent increase in the city's gasoline tax, which would increase the rate to 1½ cents until Nov. 30, 1938, a week before the State gasoline tax will be increased from 2 to 3 cents a gallon.

The tax on cigarettes, one cent on packages retaliing for 15 cents or less and 2 cents on higher priced packages, was estimated to yield $750,000.

Newspapers and other publications would be taxed 2 per cent of their gross advertising receipts to raise an estimated $200,000.

Counsel for tobacco dealers served notice on the Aldermen that the cigarette tax would be attacked in the courts, if necessary. The other taxes also probably would be opposed in the courts.

MARY PICKFORD WED TO BUDDY ROGERS

Orchestra Leader Is Movie Actress' Third Husband.

By the Associated Press.

double ring ceremony, performed by Dr. James Hamilton, Congregational minister, united the pair in the presence of 17 relatives and friends in the garden of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Louis D. Lighton.

It was the one-time Gladys Smith's third marriage and Rogers' first. In applying for their license, she gave her age as 43 and Rogers said he is 34. Miss Pickford was previously married to Owen Moore and to Douglas Fairbanks.

The bride wore a sky blue crepe gown with wine colored accessories and an empire felt hat. She carried a spray of fuschia orchids.

Rogers was attired in striped trousers, black afternoon coat and a gray waistcoat.

The matron of honor was Hope Loring (Mrs. Lighton) who wrote the story of the picture, "My Best Girl," for Miss Pickford and Rogers in 1927. B. H. Rogers, younger brother of the bridegroom, was best man.

The guests included Rogers father and mother, Judge and Mrs. B. H. Rogers, of Olathe, Kan.; Gwynne Pickford, Miss Pickford's niece; Selmer Chalif, her cousin, who gave her in marriage, and Mrs. Chalif.

After the wedding, a reception was held by the Lightons, followed by a large reception at Pickfair for friends of the bride and bridegroom. More than 300 persons attended the receptions.

Pickfair, the house built by Miss Pickford and Fairbanks soon after their marriage in 1920, is for sale.

AMELIA EARHART TAKES OFF FOR PORT DARWIN

Leaves Dutch East Indies After Mechanics Overhaul Her Ship and Replace Broken Instruments

By the Associated Press.

KOEPANG, Timod, Dutch East Indies, June 27. — (Sunday.) — Amelia Earhart landed her silver monoplane here at 1:30 p. m. today (10:30 p. m. St. Louis time, Saturday) after a flight from Bandoeng, Java, a distance of approximately 1200 miles.

The next leg of her flight will be across the Timor Sea, a hop that is considered dangerous because of uncertain weather conditions prevalent in the region.

SOURABAYA, Java, Dutch East Indies, June 27. (Sunday)—Amelia Earhart took off from here at 6:30 a. m. today (6 p. m. Saturday, St. Louis time) on her round-the-world flight. She hoped to arrive at Port Darwin, in Northern Australia, a distance of about 1300 miles, by 4 p. m. (3:30 a. m. St. Louis time), after allowing for a stop of an hour for refueling at Kopang, Timor Island.

SCULPTOR ADMITS MURDERING MODEL AND TWO OTHERS

to kill Ethel. And I was waiting. But when the door opened it was not Ethel who came. It was Ronnie. ("Ronnie" was the nickname of Veronica.) I was glad that nobody came with Ronnie. I'm still glad about that. She had a girl friend, a nice girl. I'm glad nothing happened to that girl.

Seized Veronica by Neck.

"Well, Ronnie didn't see me when she came in. She went to the bathroom. She was there a long time. I didn't intend to kill her. I just thought I would knock her out and then tie her up—and wait for Ethel. I made a sort of balckjack out of a piece of soap wrapped up in a cloth. I had read that this was effective—that it would stun, but nothing more.

"So, when Ronnie came out I was waiting in a position from which I could strike without being seen by her. I hit her. But the soap just splattered. She was not knocked out. So I grabbed her from behind, by the neck. I was very careful not to press too hard—just hard enough so she couldn't make a noise but could breathe. I think I held her that way at least an hour.

"There were moments when the pressure was relaxed enough so that she could speak a few words, not loudly. I thought she didn't know who I was. But she did. And what cost her her life was that she said so. She said: 'I know it's you, Bob. Please don't, I've had an operation.'

"So! She knew me. I didn't know what to do. I didn't want to murder the whole neighborhood. I was wondering what I would do about that damned Englishman across the hall. And I was wondering what I would do to Ronnie—because I wanted to let her live if I could. She was beautiful. I hate to destroy beauty.

"So I kept holding on—in that careful way—just tight enough to prevent noise, not tight enough to kill—until—when I began to think that with Ronnie knowing me as she did—I didn't have any alternative. Well, gentlemen, I strangled her."

"When Ronnie was dead," he said, "I looked at her with a sick feeling all through me. Her beauty was gone. She was horrible to see. Blue death seemed to issue from her—like a sort of spiritual emanation—only I know I'm not making my meaning clear. I shuddered—didn't want to see her any more. I didn't want anything—excepting to get away, safely, from that house.

Turns to Ice Pick.

"My brain was working so fast I could almost hear it. It was telling me what I had to do. The Englishman. I must kill him too. I was certain that he had been listening to everything that had happened. I was sure that nothing but cowardice had kept him away. I would use the ice pick on him. It was the ice pick I had intended from the first to use—on Ethel—and up to this time I had not used it on anybody. I seemed to know that there was no chance of getting Ethel, for it was almost morning. I was very tired.

"So, to finish it, I took the ice pick and went to the Englishman's room. I opened the door and he was lying on the bed. Asleep? Apparently he was. But how could I be sure? How could I know that, even if he was asleep now, he had been asleep all the time?

"I didn't believe it. I was certain that he knew of my coming. He would remember that when the police came. He would tell them I had been there. Even if he didn't know I had done the killings he would tell them I was there — and that would be enough.

Struck With Ice Pick.

"I stood for a moment over his bed. I lifted the ice pick, point down, and struck. Through the temple. Then I struck again. I don't know how many times I struck. Afterwards, in the newspapers, I read that he had been stabbed 15 times. I don't know. If there were that many wounds I must have struck that many times. Then I went away."

Newsboys Woke Him Up.

"It was morning when I, the only living person left in that house, stepped out and closed the door. There was an overwhelming weariness all through me. I wanted rest—sleep. I was so sleepy I could hardly walk the short distance around the corner to my room. I went in and dropped on my bed. It was not until evening that I was wakened by the cries of newsboys below my window. They were selling extras. They were yelling about a "triple murder"—and it all came back to me in an instant.

"It did not frighten me. I was as calm as I ever had been. I was sure that I would not be suspected. I was so sure of this that I did not even take the trouble to move from the neighborhood—not for a week."

"Ronnie was nothing to me," he said. " . . . I loved only one woman and that was Ethel—and Ethel had married, a man named Joe Kudner."

Irwin said that on the Saturday following the murders he went to Philadelphia by train, then to Washington by bus on Monday.

Monday night he hopped a Chicago-bound freight train, dropping off at Willard, Ohio. He said he made his way to Akron and then to Cleveland.

Why He Left Cleveland.

Irwin said he had come to Chicago direct from Cleveland, where he had been working as a bar boy in a hotel.

He fled after his identity had been discovered by a kitchen girl, Henrietta Koscianski, who had the habit of thumbing through detective story magazines which publish pictures of wanted men.

She saw Irwin's picture in one of these magazines and was struck by his resemblance to the bar boy whom she knew only as "Bob."

At first, as she afterward told the Cleveland police, she thought this was only a coincidence. And it was in a playful mood that she spoke to "Bob" about it.

"Say, Bob, what's your last name?" she asked.

"Murray," he said.

Then she asked: "Did you ever hear of Robert Irwin?"

In mentioning this tonight, Irwin said:

"I gave her an apparently careless answer in the negative, but I knew that I was in danger again and I walked straight out and never returned."

MAN ADMITS HOLDUP OF TWO DRUG STORES

Bernard Howard Says His Brother, Now in Prison, Participated.

Warrants charging robbery will be sought tomorrow by police against Bernard Howard, 27-year-old laborer, arrester last night in the 2000 block of South Ninth street. Howard was quoted by police as admitting two drug store holdups last summer, in which his brother, Norman, participated. Norman Howard was sentenced to a five-year sentence at Algoa Farms last November.

Bernard Howard, police said, admitted that with his brother and another man, he had robbed the Gasen drug store at 223 South Euclid avenue, last July, and the Wykle drug store at 2735 South Kingshighway a few days later. Two persons who were in the latter store have identified Bernard Howard as one of the robbers, police said.

Howard was arrested on information that he had been living in the 2000 block of South Ninth street. Police quoted him as saying that, since the robberies, he had been hiding out, performing various odd jobs around St. Louis to earn a living.

FAMILY ANSWERS SOME QUESTIONS ON MRS. PARSONS

But They Cast Little Light on Her Disappearance — Has Had No Mental Disorder, They Say.

LIST SUBMITTED BY REPORTERS

Status of Russian-Born Woman in Long Island Household Is Still Unestablished.

By the Associated Press.

STONY BROOK, N. Y., June 26. —While there was no development in the mysterious disappearance June 9 of Mrs. Alice McDonell Parsons, some minor points were cleared up today when her family gave answers to a series of questions put to them by newspaper men working on the case. There were 23 questions, but only seven answers.

The family did not express a belief that Mrs. Parsons was alive and well, but said merely: "That is our sincere hope."

Mrs. Parsons had never suffered from any mental disorder, the family said.

The questions were handed to Frank McDonell, brother of Mrs. Parsons, and were examined by him and his brother, Howard, and by William H. Parsons, husband of the missing woman.

A few of the questions sought to establish the exact position in the Parsons household of Mrs. Anna Kupryanova, Russian-born woman, who told the authorities Mrs. Parsons left home in the company of a middle-aged man and woman. It was several hours after this departure that a ransom note demanding $25,000 was found. No information about Mrs. Kupryanova was forthcoming.

"Did Mr. Parsons know Mrs. Kupryanova before his marriage*" was one question. The answer was "no." The same reply was written after a question about whether Mrs. Kupryanova became associated with the household as a result of previous acquaintance with any member of the Parsons or McDonell families.

"Has Mrs. Parsons ever suffered from amnesia or mental disorder?" read another question. "Definitely, no." "Has she ever disappeared before?" "No."

"Did she or Mr. Parsons have any known enemies?" "No."

The only other question answered was one expressing satisfaction with the authorities' efforts.

Lindsay Henry, Assistant District Attorney of Suffolk County, conferred today with Earl Connelley, inspector of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, but the conference was the only sign of activity in the village. Henry probably will question Parsons and Mrs. Kupryanova on Monday.

5000 SCOUTS SET UP CAMP FOR JAMBOREE

More Than 20,000 Others Expected at Washington for 10-Day Event.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 26.—Many-colored tent towns housed more than 5000 boy scouts tonight as the first contingent of 27,000 boys came to the capital for a 10-day jamboree starting Tuesday.

These early arrivals, called "host" troops, set up tents of many descriptions over the 350-acre camp. Nine large tepees housed one group of 38 scouts from Pennsylvania. A delegation from South Shore Connecticut, points constructed tents of eight-bed capacity.

Some troups encountered delays as their leaders hunted for the general quartermaster's tent to obtain a formal release of camping equipment which consisted of tables, pots, pans and blankets. Half the boys brought their own tents and the others used borrowed War Department material.

The first jamboree meal was served tonight in eight mess tents and brought the first major test of elaborate preparations scout officials had made to feed the hungry youngsters.

The jamboree commissary planned to serve the first official meal Monday night when about 20,000 scouts will be in camp.

A scout who traveled half way around the world by air led today's arrivals at camp. Exequiel Villacorta, Chief Scout representing 17,000 scouts in the Philippine Islands, came by plane from Chicago. He left Manila a week ago. Delegations also were in camp from New Zealand, Lithuania and Venezuela.

Troops arrived today from West Virginia, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Texas, Michigan, Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey and Illinois. About 7000 more will come tomorrow. They will include [illegible] scouts and leaders from New York City, the largest single delegation.

LAMMOT DU PONT WINS $382,727 INCOME TAX PLEA

Board Lets Him Deduct Business Losses but Nothing for Indian Hunt.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 26. — The Board of Tax Appeals held today that Lammont du Pont of Wilmington, Del., was entitled to deduct on his 1930 income tax return $382,727 in losses suffered by a corporation of which he was sole stockholder.

Du Pont had petitioned the board to set aside tax deficiencies levied by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of $99,945 in 1930 and $28,579 for 1931. The board decided that $382,727 in losses sustained through operation of the corporation, known as the Saint Amour Co., represented bona fide sales and were deductible. The commissioner had contended that the corporation was created for the purpose of evading taxes.

The board ruled against du Pont, however, in his efforts to deduct $46,392 from his taxable income in 1930, representing sums loaned to a scientific expedition into the Chucunaque Valley of Panama in search of White Indians.

FORD "60" OWNERS REPORT

22-27 MILES PER GALLON

THE 60-horsepower Ford V-8 engine was first built for England and France, two years ago. Fuel costs are high over there and the "60" thoroughly proved its unusual economy.

Today it is writing even more remarkable mileage records on American roads. Private owners, fleet operators, and cab companies alike report averages of from 22 to 27 miles on a gallon of gasoline.

You can fill the tank of your Ford "60" and drive all day, if you like—300 to 400 miles—without stopping again for fuel. Besides costing less to run than any other Ford car ever built, it sells at the lowest Ford price in years. That's double economy!

The "60" delivers V-8 smoothness and quiet at speeds up to 70 miles an hour and its famous older brother, the "85," gives top performance and greater gasoline mileage this year than ever.

Both engine sizes are built into the same roomy car, of the same advanced design, with the same modern features of comfort and dependability that make the 1937 Ford V-8 unquestionably THE QUALITY CAR IN THE LOW-PRICE FIELD.

BRITAIN, FRANCE STRIVE TO ADJUST SPANISH PATROL

One Proposal Is That They Take Over Whole Task Since Germany and Italy Have Withdrawn.

SUBJECT COMES UP AT TUESDAY SESSION

Neutrality Committee Will Meet Then—Tension in London Noticeably Relaxed.

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, June 26—British diplomats will resume their efforts next week to draw Germany and Italy back into full co-operation in the international non-intervention patrol around Spain.

A government spokesman said that Britain and France would do their utmost to close the gap in the patrol, created by the withdrawal of the two Fascist nations, when the sub-committee of the 27-nation neutrality committee meets here Tuesday.

There was a conviction that Italy and Germany would see the force of the argument that the broken patrol ring would permit more war supplies to reach the Valencia government, enable the Loyalists to hold out longer and so—from the German and Italian viewpoint—"prolong the war unnecessarily."

That argument, it was thought, would further the adoption of British and French proposals that if the four-power patrol (Britain, France, Germany and Italy) could not be re-established, British and French ships would undertake the entire task.

Although Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden worked to perfect details of his "peace at almost any price" program for meeting the European crisis, there was a noticeable relaxation of tension in London.

Several versions of the proposed British-French patrol of Spanish coasts were discussed in authoritative quarters. It was indicated Great Britain probably would offer to patrol the entire eastern coast with France patrolling the rest, with some British assistance.

From Paris came the suggestion that Italian and German co-operation might be enlisted by placing Italian observers on French patrol ships and Germans aboard the British vessels.

It was also said Britain was prepared to push its plans for the withdrawal of all foreigners now engaged in the war in Spain.

Berlin Still Disgruntled Over Outcome of Leipzig Incident.

By the Associated Press.

BERLIN, June 26.—Disappointment over the refusal of Great Britain and France to join in a proposed naval demonstration against Valencia still is a powerful factor in Berlin's attitude toward the Spanish crisis, a Foreign Office spokesman said tonight.

He said the conciliatory references to Germany in the speeches of British leaders in the House of Commons yesterday were appreciated, but these could not offset the feeling of chagrin over Britain's reaction to the Leipzig incident.

The Foreign Office mouthpiece, Diplomatische Politische Korrespondenz, declared that responsibility for future development of the European crisis "rests with those powers which did not desire a logical and healthy settlement of the Leipzig incident and declined to join in an act of solidarity of a defensive, preventive nature."

This German attitude, it was indicated, will become important when the plan of Britain and France to have their own warships replace German and Italian vessels in the international patrol of Spanish waters come before the 27-nation non-intervention committee in London Tuesday. However, there has been no outright German rejection of the proposal.

The Foreign Office spokesman said Germany wishes to do nothing to aggravate the Spanish situation. On the other hand it considers it "self evident that no threat can keep her from protecting to the full her legitimate mercantile shipping in endangered waters."

Such protection, the spokesman insisted, does not constitute an international menace. The best proof of that, he said, is Germany's moderation after the Leipzig incident. The Germans charged two attempts were made by Spanish Government submarines to torpedo the German cruiser Leipzig off Algeria.

HEAT WAVE AT POLE IMPERILS SOVIET BASE

Camp Shifted by Rain Weakening Ice; Block House Melts Away.

By the Associated Press.

MOSCOW, June 26.—The North Pole is having a heat wave. Radio messages from the Soviet North Pole base today described a crisis in the lives of the four men who volunteered to remain there a year.

Temperture has been hovering around the freezing, or melting, mark for a week. It has rained in that land of supposedly perpetual ice and snow. Fog today reduced the visibility to 200 yards.

The rain weakened the ice on which the camp is based. The main camp as a result was shifted closer to the center of the half-mile-square ice floe on which it is drifting about the pole.

An ice-block house constrcted for the radio station melted. The radio apparatus was crowded into the main tent, which was propped up on planks to protect it from water. Scientific work was abandoned temporarily.

The four men are Ivan Papanin, chief of the camp; Ernest Krenkel, radio man; Peter Shirsov, hydrobiologist, and Eugene Feodorov, astronomer and magnetologist.

Outlaw Hears Death Sentence

LESTER A. BROCKELHURST

IN courtroom at Lonoke, Ark., where Judge W. J. Waggoner sentenced him to die in the electric chair August 27 for the murder of a planter. His girl companion, Bernice Felton was acquitted.

BROCKELHURST'S COMPANION HELD ON FEDERAL CHARGE

Girl Is Accused of Transporting Stolen Auto Over Arkansas Line.

By the Associated Press.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., June 26.—Bernice Felton, 18, acquitted on charges of aiding Lester Brockelhurst murder Victor A. Gates near Lonoke May 6, was held tonight on a Federal charge of transporting a stolen automobile from Arkansas to Tennessee.

United States Commissioner W. M. Rankin ordered her held to the October grand jury under $1500 bond, which she was unable to furnish. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Felton, said they would seek to arrange bail at their home, Rockford, Ill., and post it for her in Federal Court there.

The charge was based on the allegation that after Gates was slain, Brockelhurst and the Felton girl drove the Little Rock man's automobile across the Arkansas-Tennessee State line. The two were arrested May 13 at Brewster, N. Y., in possession of Gates' machine.

Brockelhurst, sentenced to die in the electric chair Aug. 27, testified at the girl's trial in Lonoke yesterday he killed Gates and stole the automobile because the girl wanted a means of transportation.

CHANGE OF VENUE GRANTED IN SUIT TO OUST PROSECUTOR

Judge Reserves Ruling in Similar Action to Remove Joplin Mayor From Office.

By the Associated Press.

CARTHAGE, Mo., June 26.—Circuit Judge Wilbur Owen granted the State a change of venue to Barton County in its ouster suit against Jasper County Prosecutor Charles R. Warden here today, but reserved his ruling in a similar action against Mayor A. C. Maher of Joplin.

Ouster actions against both were filed by the State on charges of neglect of duty after the same charges had been made in grand jury indictments.

Attorneys were given until July 10 to file completed briefs on defense motions to quash criminal cases brought by the grand jury against the two officials. Judge Owen said he expected to rule on the motions on the first day of the November term of court.

SUIT OVER PLANE COLLISION

Action in Denver Thought To Be First of Its Kind

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

DENVER, Colo., June 26—What is believed to be the first suit ever filed for damages resulting from an airplane collision was entered recently by Everett Brittain against A. Putnam Humphreys, millionaire sportsman.

Brittain demandes $259.50 actual and $500 exemplary damages because, he asserts, his plane was damaged last Oct. 15 when it was struck by one being taxied by Humphreys at excessive speed. The collision occurred at a Denver airport.

LABOR BOARD HEARING RECESSES IN UPROAR

Examiner Accuses Montgomery Ward Attorney of Contemptuous Attitude.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., June 26.—The National Labor Relation Board's hearing on its complaint alleging unfair practices by Montgomery Ward & Co., recessed in an uproar this afternoon after Trial Examiner James C. Paradise threatened to exclude Carl Enggas, one of the company's attorneys, from the hearing because of "his highly contemptuous attitude toward the examiner."

The dispute concerned Paradise's exclusion from the record of a part of the proceedings which Enggas deemed pertinent. Henry H. Foster Jr., field examiner for the board, charged Enggas was intimidating one of the board's witnesses in cross-examination and that taitics followed by the company counsel had "interfered with the obtaining of other witnesses."

Enggas denied the allegation, and Paradise ordered the reporter to exclude the remarks of both attorneys from the record.

"Take down everything and keep it all on the record," Enggas shouted to the stenographer, who continued his work.

The examiner reprimanded the reporter for recording the proceedings. The verbal crossfire continued, the stenographer finally admitting, "Gentlemen, I can't tell what to do."

Paradise then instructed the reporter to record only what he specified, on penalty of dismissal.

Henry N. Ess, another company attorney, protested and moved for a dismissal of the complaint, declaring the record was incomplete. Paradise overruled the motion.

Before the noisy end of the day's session, five Montgomery Ward employes testified supervisors had asked them to join the union of Ward employes, which the board says is company-dominated.

The hearing will be resumed Monday morning.

SAFETY COUNCIL WARNING OF ACCIDENTS ON THE FOURTH

Lists Reckless Driving First, Drownings Second and Fireworks Casualties Fourth

Expecting a large number of Fourth of July accidents than usual because the holiday comes on a week-end this year, the St. Louis Safety Council yesterday listed the expected mishaps in the order of their serious consequences, putting traffic accidents due to reckless driving first.

Drownings were next in the list, followed by automobile accidents caused by exploding fireworks, injuries caused directly by fireworks, and destructive fires caused by fireworks.

LOCKING OF W P A OFFICIAL IN OFFICE "GOING TOO FAR"

Deputy Administrator at Washington Deplores Action of New York Strikers.

WASHINGTON, June 26.—Aubrey Williams, Deputy Works Progreess Administrator, told a delegation of protesting W P A workers from New York City today that the locking of a New York W P A official in his office in a demonstration last night was "going too far."

Williams said he deplored the occurrence in which striking workers on arts projects imprisoned Harold Stein, their administrator, for eight hours.

"A few more things like that and you might as well kiss W P A out of the window," he said.

The group of 62 was headed by Chet La More, a young painter. Edward Gahan, acting as press agent, said the workers felt they had won some concessions and would return to New York after a picnic given them by Emil Ludwig, the German writer.

Williams said he would investigate all charges of unfairness but would not approve any agreement obtained from Stein "under duress."

The arts workers said they should have special consideration because of a lack of employment opportunities for writers, musicians, actors and artists.

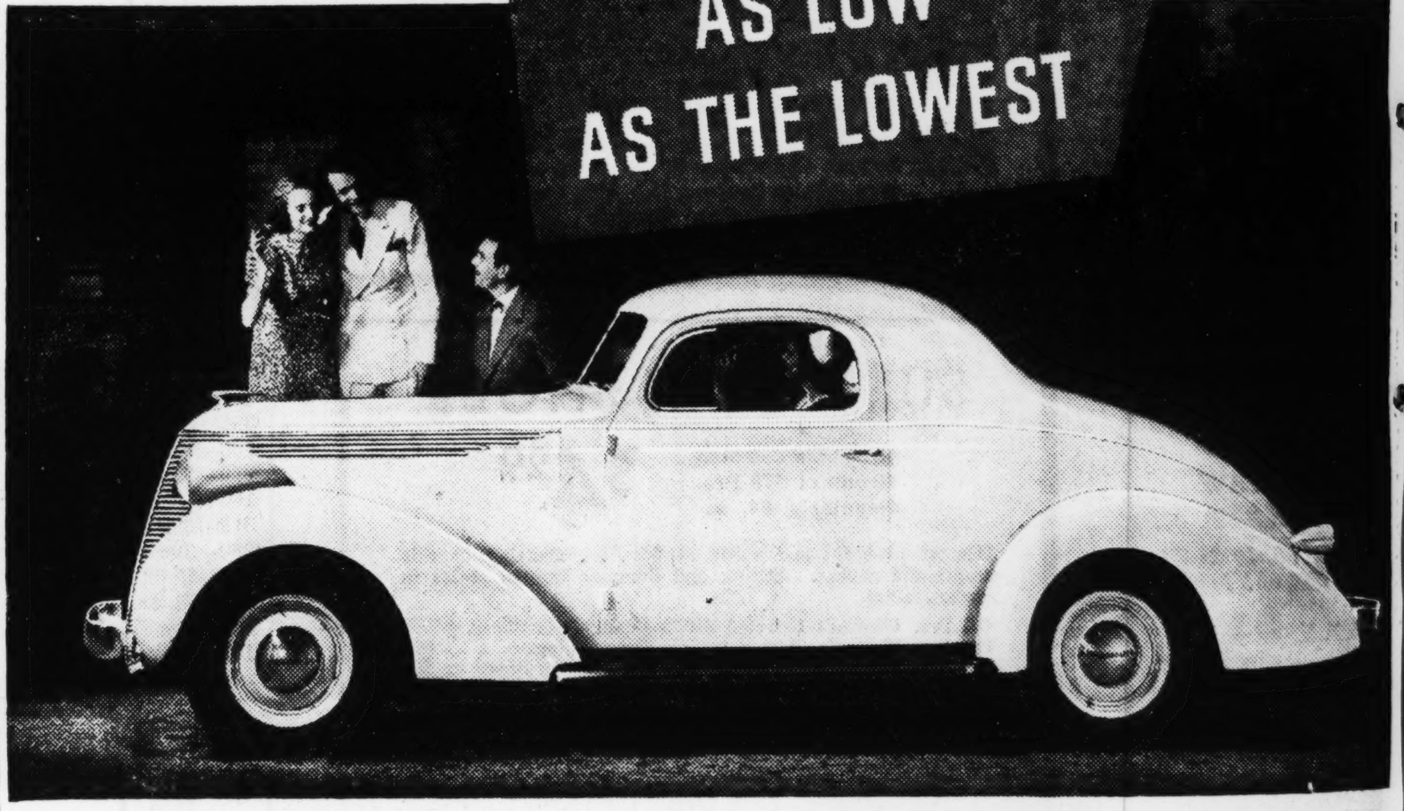
Just a little money buys you this smart Studebaker coupe

PRICED ALMOST AS LOW AS THE LOWEST



AND IT'S THE ECONOMY MARVEL OF 1937

THEY'VE been telling you for years that this car or that is very economical.

But if you want real facts instead of unsupported claims and sweeping generalities, talk to an owner of a 1937 Studebaker and get the low-down on Studebaker's impressively low consumption of gas and oil!

Studebaker claims, and stands ready to prove, that no other car on the market can match the oil economy the built-in Fram oil cleaner gives the 1937 Studebaker. And with the automatic overdrive, optional at slight cost, Studebaker gas economy equals that of lowest priced cars.

Beautiful beyond words, with its big air-curved steel body gleaming in a paint finish twelve coats deep, the new Studebaker has impressively roomy interiors richly styled by Helen Dryden. It has more usable trunk room than any other 1937 car. It is all alone in truly restful riding.

It's the only car with doors that you don't have to slam to close tightly . . . the first car to offer the double safety of the automatic hill holder and triply sealed feather touch hydraulic brakes. It has refreshing warm weather ventilation. See it, drive it and price it—and find out convincingly how much more it offers you than any other car.

DANIEL BOONE BRIDGE OPENED BY GOV. STARK

Speeches, Music, Motor Parade, Planes When $1,250,000 Span Over Missouri Is Dedicated.

With speeches by Gov. Stark and others, military band music, a motor procession accompanied by National Guard airplanes, dancing and a general St. Charles County civic celebration, the $1,250,000 Daniel Boone Bridge over the Missouri River at Weldon Springs was dedicated and opened to traffic yesterday afternoon.

The State Highway Commission, which erected the toll-free structure, refrains from naming any of its works, but the Governor recognized the Daniel Boone designation in his address. This name was chosen by St. Charles County civic interests, which sponsored the program, in which delegations from St. Louis and St. Louis County joined.

Boone, the noted pioneer, spent the last part of his life nearby in St. Charles County.

Gov. Stark, in his address, described the new crossing as the largest and most expensive bridge ever built by the State, the widest bridge across the Missouri except for the A.-S.-B. Bridge at Kansas City, the thirteenth free bridge across the river between St. Joseph, Mo., and the mouth of the stream, and the seventeenth bridge across this river within Missouri.

Serves Two U. S. Highways.

It was the "last word" in bridge construction, he declared, and, by serving two transcontinental roads—U. S. Highways Nos. 40 and 61—would carry traffic from every section of the Union. In approving the name chosen for the structure, the Governor termed the neighboring country historic and recalled that his own forefathers had crossed the Eastern mountains with Boone. He contrasted the picture of canoes of Indians and pioneers on the river and ox-carts on the banks with the present-day steadily increasing motor freight and passenger traffic of the highway.

The next objective of Missouri's road movement is construction of more farm-to-market roads in every county, he declared, saying this was the principal reason for the increase of the State gasoline tax from 2 to 3 cents a gallon, effective Dec. 7, 1938. It will be his duty as Governor to see that these roads are built, he added.

The bridge is part of the $4,500,000 new location of U. S. highway No. 40 between St. Louis and Wentzville, St. Charles County. Included in the dedication was a 20-mile stretch of concrete pavement, partly of four and three-lane width, between Bellefontaine, St. Louis County, and Wentzville. The State is building a four-lane section between Lindbergh boulevard and Bellefontaine, and has designated the route along Clayton road and through Ladue, from the express highway in Forest Park to Lindbergh.

Effort to Change Route.

Robert B. Brooks, St. Louis member of the commission, said in his speech that it was hoped to pave the portion west of Lindbergh next year. He disclosed that citizens of Clayton and Richmond Heights were working with State engineers in an effort to change the route for one mile in the latter suburb, by extending eastward the point of departure from Clayton road.

The present route leaves Clayton road about a quarter of a mile east of North and South road, veering to the south about half a mile. The change would keep the super-highway on a new location south of Clayton road to a point west of Big Bend boulevard. Brooks said it appeared that a subway would be necessary to handle the traffic in Clayton road, between Big Bend and the express highway in the park, as this tsretch now carried the heaviest burden of any road in the State.

S. M. Rudder, assistant chief engineer of the State Highway Department, related that enough concrete to pave a two-lane road for seven miles went into the bridge, together with 10,000,000 pounds of steel. He said the P W A furnished about 30 per cent of the construction money. "We are blessed in this State," he concluded, "with not having to worry about diversion of highway funds for other things, and are proud to have a road-minded Governor to lead us."

The Governor's wife cut a white ribbon at the center of the bridge, signifying that the structure was open to the public. There was an audience of about 2000 persons on the blistering hot concrete floor of the three-lane crossing. Mayor Dickmann of St. Louis was among them.

Celebration at Wentzville.

There was a concert by the Sixth Infantry Band, from Jefferson Barracks. The motor parade moved afterwards to a park at Wentzville for more speechmaking. Overhead flew a squadron of airplanes from the Thirty-fifth Division Aviation, National Guard of Missouri. Entertainment numbers, dancing and barbecue meals enlivened the civic celebration at Wentzville.

Until more of the superhighway is opened in St. Louis County, traffic will reach the new route at Bellefontaine by Olive Street road and various county roads. The new route, when completed, will measure 41½ miles from Municipal Bridge to Wentzville. For much traffic it will shorten travel distances materially, and for all it will save time as a result of its design and comparative freedom from congestion.

State to Spend $650,000 on St. Charles Highway.

Plans for early expenditure of $650,000 for widening the west end of St. Charles road and improving the St. Charles bridge were announced by Robert B. Brooks, St. Louis member of the State Highway Commission, in an address at the dedication of the new Daniel Boons Bridge yesterday.

A new road will be constructed for 2.84 miles, between the present west end of the broad pavement near West Lake Park and the bridge, he said. For the first half-mile the new section will have four lanes, like the rest of the route to the east, while the remainder of the construction will be three lanes. The location will follow the abandoned right-of-way of the St. Charles car line. Brooks said the job, estimated to cost $300,000, would be completed by next summer, if possible.

PARIS HOTEL LOCKOUT SEEMINGLY STAVED OFF

New Premier Sees Owners Who Protest at Establishing of 40-Hour Week.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, June 26.—The Chautemps Government appeared today to have prevented a lockout by hotels, restaurants and cafes which would have tied up the tourist trade.

After the owners had announced the shutdown would begin July 3, as a protest against the 40-hour week, their representatives were called into conference with the Government. An official statement said Government negotiators "received the impression appeals to the patriotism of the hotel proprietors will be heeded."

(The New York representative of the French Government's Tourist Bureau announced he had received official word "that the hotel and restaurant lockout announced in Paris has been canceled.")

Premier Camille Chautemps, in office only four days, faced with his first major test in France's labor situation, had promised every effort to "re-establish an atmosphere of loyal co-operation."

The proprietors bitterly opposed extension of the 40-hour week, already generally applied to French industry under the People's Front social reform program, to their business. They asserted they would have to add 65,000 persons to their payrolls, now totaling about 250,000, and increase their costs by from 15 to 25 per cent.

PENALTY REMISSION ON RALPH SEWER TAX

Court Holds That New State Law Applies to These Unpaid Accounts.

Taxpayers of the seven old St. Louis County sewer districts set up under the Ralph law may save about $200,000 in interest, penalties and court costs on delinquent taxes amounting to $406,725, if they pay their bills by next Wednesday, under a decision yesterday at Clayton by Circuit Judge John A. Witthaus.

The Judge held, in settling a friendly suit filed last Wednesday, that the State law which became effective June 10, remitting penalties on delinquent taxes in general, applied to unpaid accounts of these sewer districts.

Collector Willis W. Benson had been in doubt whether the law authorized him to accept the back sewer taxes without penalty. His attorney, Arthur U. Simmons, entered appearance in the case but did not oppose it.

The suit was filed by Attorney Orla M. Hill in behalf of several taxpayers and in the name of Mrs. Lavinia B. Shallcross, 217 South Woodlawn avenue Kirkwood. It asked that Benson be compelled to accept without penalty Mrs. Shallcross' payment of $1009, representing only the principal of taxes due since 1932 on 26 acres of land in Richmond Heights, in the old Central Sewer District.

Taxes in the seven old districts aggregated originally about $1,200,000, but a considerable part has been paid. William H. Tegethoff, liquidator of the districts, has filed about 15,000 suits to collect on the bills. He estimated, in response to inquiry by a Post-Dispatch reporter, that the saving in interest and penalties would be $125,000 on bills paid by Wednesday and the saving in court costs about $75,000.

The penalty remission law wiped out all charges on bills paid in June, 75 per cent of the penalties in July and August, 50 per cent in September and October and 25 per cent in November and December.

Under the widely criticised Ralph law, which was repealed some time ago, no sewers were constructed, but heavy preliminary expenses were piled up. These districts were the Central, Jennings, Lemay Ferry, Overland, St. Ferdinand, Webster Groves General Sewer District No. 1 and Wellston. They are not to be confused with existing districts now carrying out plans for extensive sanitary sewers in the suburbs under a new law.

VASHON SCHOOL HEARING CONTINUES INTO THIRD WEEK

Instructors Are Questioned About Noise of Grade School Pupils.

Frank L. Williams, principal, and William G. Mosly, assistant principal of Vashon Negro High School, testified as defense witnesses yesterday at the conclusion of the second week of trial of the suit to enjoin the Board of Education from building an elementary school on the Vashon High School grounds. The hearing will be resumed tomorrow.

John Rush Powell, assistant superintendent in charge of high schools, a witness for the defense, denied that high school students would be disturbed by proximity of grade school pupils at recess.

Principal Williams testified that the noise made during recess by pupils of a portable grade school on the Vashon campus disturbed the high school students to a greater extent than did passing traffic, but he had never complained to the Board of Education, as he felt the situation was "temporary."

Mosly said he supervised discipline and class room work at the high schol, but the noise made by elementary students during recess, a question which has played an important part in the hearing, did not interfere enough with the activities of the high school to be considered in the schedule. When the elementary pupils played outside, he said, it was necessary for the teachers to lower the windows to eliminate some of the noise, but the teachers had never complained of being disturbed.

STRIKERS TURN DOWN BEAN FARMERS' PLEA

Refuse to Go Back to Work in Maryland Cannery to Save $240,000 Crop.

By the Associated Press.

CAMBRIDGE, Md., June 26.—Striking Phillips Packing Co. employes rejected a plea from farmers today to settle their dispute temporarily and save the community's bean crop.

Russell P. Smith, Dorchester County register of wills, who operates a large farm, presented the farmers' plea to a meeting of about 600 of the 2000 strikers at the state armory.

Also on the platform were 50 leading farmers and a strikers' committee which has negotiated unsuccessfully with the canning company for wage increases.

Smith asked the strikers to accept a 10 per cent increase in hourly wages offered by the company and go back to work long enough to handle the crop, estimated to be worth $240,000. If the beans are not handled in a few days they will become worthless.

"If you accept," Smith told them, "You will save our farms, our wives and our children. Accept, and arrange some other settlement at the end of 30 days."

Lonnie Nealan, head of the strikers' committee, drew a shouted statement from the strikers that they would return to work only with a 5 cents an hour increase—twice as much as the company agreed to give. Robert Bloom, a member of the strike committee, told the farmers, "If we get ours, you'll get yours." His pronouncement received shouts of approval from the strikers.

Harry T. Phoebus, State Commissioner of Labor, proposed that committees of the farmers and strikers appear before Col. Albanus Phillips, president of the company, in a new effort to reach an agreement. The strike began Tuesday.

Phillips refused to proceed with further negotiations unless he was assured the authorities can guarantee law and order. He said the plant would be unable to resume operations even if the strike were settled, in time to salvage the crop.

The company, he said, lost $100,000 the first six months of this year.

He declined to consider a compromise proposal by Smith, speaking for the farmers, and William Stewart, a strike leader, that the farmers take 10 per cent less for the bean crop, this amount to be paid to the strikers during a 30-day period of negotiations for a permanent agreement.

The collapse of negotiations left the town in a state of marked unrest.

FACTORY EMPLOYMENT KEEPS UP IMPROVEMENT IN MAY

Federal Reserve Board Reports Reversal of Seasonal Influences for Month.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 26. — The Federal Reserve Board reported today the factory employment situation continued to improve during May.

The board said the increased number of jobs, although slight, was significant because seasonal influences usually caused a decrease during May. The board's adjusted index of factory employment rose from 101.6 to 102.1 per cent of the 1923-25 level. In May, 1936, the index was 89.8.

The volume of industrial production in May "continued at the level of the two preceding months," the board's monthly business review reported. Commodity prices, however, declined slightly in May and the first three weeks of June.

Both the April and May production indexes stood at 118, compared with 101 in May, 1936.

The board said the output of iron, steel, automobiles, lumber, crude petroleum, bituminous coal and iron ore increased in May, but recent strikes have curtailed automobile and steel production.

PRICE OF NEW POTATOES OFF; VEGETABLE SUPPLY INCREASES

Condition of Market Reported by Agriculture Department in Survey.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 26.—An Agriculture Department survey today showed shippers to New York City recently received $1.71 for 100 pounds of new potatoes compared with $3.09 a month earlier and $4.09 last year. A large crop of early potatoes caused the price decline, the department said.

Larger market supplies this summer than last were indicated for beans, tomatoes spinach, lettuce, green peas, cucumbers and watermelons.

FIREPROOF INSULATION APPLIED TO HISTORIC OLD BUILDING

THE OLD CATHEDRAL OF ST. LOUIS

The cornerstone of the Old Cathedral was laid on August 1, 1831, in which was placed a sealed glass vase, containing a parchment with the following inscription: "In the year of Our Lord 1831, on the first day of August, the 55th year of our American Independence, during the pontificate of Pope Gregory XVI, Andrew Jackson being President of the United States, and John Miller Governor of Missouri, the cornerstone of this Cathedral Church, in honor of St. Louis of France, to be erected by the Catholic citizens of St. Louis, was blessed and placed by the Right Rev. Bishop Rosati, Bishop of St. Louis, assisted by the Rev. Fathers E. Saulinier, P. J. Verhaegen, S. J., L. Rondot, P. W. Walsh, M. Condamine, J. A. Elet, A. Mascaroni and L. Doutreluingnex."

Insulation with Johns-Manville Rock Wool was recently completed in the Old Cathedral, at Second and Walnut Streets, minimizing the fire hazard and making the continued use of this splendid old building safer and more comfortable.

Father Shulte, in choosing Johns-Manville insulation, followed the precedent of many others who made their selection only after careful investigation of available materials.

This application of Rock Wool, by the Home Insulation Company, of St. Louis, will make this church far cooler in summer and easier and more economically heated in winter.

ROOSEVELT'S GUESTS FISH, SWIM, PLAY BALL

President Sits Under Apple Tree and Chats With Senators and Congressmen.

By the Associated Press.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., June 26.—Democratic Senators and Congressmen returning tonight from their picnic with President Roosevelt brought back a more detailed description of a soft ball game than of legislative prospects.

Like the contingent which preceded them to Jefferson Island yesterday, they reported virtually no serious discussion of national or congressional affairs.

One House member said every time somebody edged up to the President for what might be pointed discussion, Speaker Bankhead or Representative Rayburn, House majority leader, elbowed in or somebody started a song.

Returning from the island, Bankhead remarked: "There really was no inside stuff at all." He said there was no talk of adjournment and that "no one knows when we can adjourn."

"We had a softball game," he added, "and tried to get young. But we made a bust of it."

Just as the President's initiation into the Demagogue Club of House members was the outstanding feature of yesterday's outing, the ball game provided today's highlight. A House team whipped the Senate, 13 to 2. Postmaster-General Farley and Secretary of Agriculture Wallace played for the Senators as "ringers." Senator Barkley of Kentucky was umpire.

Roosevelt Under Apple Tree.

Photographers who were permitted on the island today said they saw a few poker games, some horseshoe pitching, swimming and fishing, a bar, and the President sitting under an apple tree chatting. He was dressed in white and with his shirt open at the throat. Reporters still were barred.

Senator McCarran, of Nevada, a leading opponent of the Roosevelt court reorganization bill, said he did not hear that controversial measure mentioned. He agreed with others that there was nothing but fun and foolishness at the party.

Joseph B. Keenan, assistant Attorney-General, forecast, however, that the court vote would come "much earlier" than expected, and that the administration strength would be "greater than has been prophesied."

He said he did not base his forecast on anything that happened today, because there was little talk of the court bill, but felt the party would not do the administration position "any harm."

Remaining at the island overnight, in addition to the President and his Cabinet, were Harry L. Hopkins, Senators Pittman and Robinson and Rayburn.

One Who Talked Business.

Representative Voorhis, of California, was the only guest who said he talked business with Roosevelt. He said he told him that a House "liberal" group is insistent that Congress stay in session until the administration's legislative program is completed.

He said a steering committee of his group, made up of Representatives McFarlane of Texas, Murdock of Arizona, Fries of Illinois, Leavy and Hill of Washington, and Colden of California, participated in the discussion.

One Progressive made the trip today—Representative Havenner of California. He said he did not know why he was invited, but was "delighted." He was elected with Democratic indorsement.

President Roosevelt will be joined by several members of his family and possibly Mrs. Roosevelt on his return cruise to Washington. James Roosevelt is already on the island.

Others who will join the President tomorrow are Mr. and Mrs. John Boettiger and Mr. and Mrs. Elliott Roosevelt. Mrs. Boettiger is the President's daughter.

WALKUP

TIGER

CLIFT HITS 13TH HOMER; ALLEN GETS 3 SAFETIES

By a Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

BOSTON, June 26.—"Curve Ball" Jimmy Walkup pitched a four-hit game in fine style as his Browns beat the Red Sox, 7 to 1, in the chilly mist at Fenway Park this afternoon.

Walkup's fine game ruined the day for an unusually small Saturday afternoon crowd of 2000 who, despite the weather, came out to see these Sox continue their winning streak which had reached nine victories in the last 10 games. It was half raining and a cold wind was blowing.

True, Boston scored off the Brownie hurler but it wasn't exactly his fault. Walkup was well on his way to a shutout but a break for the Red Sox gave them their lone tally in the ninth. Up to that time Jimmy had been in no semblance of trouble and the only damage threatened was two harmless hits, Doc Cramer's harmless single in the sixth with two out and Marcum's double in the eighth.

Chapman Makes Lone Run.

Ben Chapman, the first man up in the ninth, singled to left, the third base hit off Walkup. While Cronin was striking out Chapman stole second and then continued easily on to third when Catcher Huffman threw the ball away. Jimmy Foxx, next up, sent a long fly into right field. Beau Bell took it down but Chapman scored after the catch.

While Walkup was tieing the Sox into knots, his pals pounded Johnny Marcum for 13 hits, including a pair of doubles by Ethan Allen and a single, Harlond Clift's thirteenth homer of the season and a single, with each man, including Jimmy, getting at least one safety off the heavy right-handed John. Marcum, out some time with an injury, was back for the first time today, and, as noted, Hornsby's men had little trouble connecting regularly.

Bill Knickerbocker started off the Browns with a single to center in the second. Carey's single to left put Bill on second. Then, with two gone, Harry Davis singled to center, scoring Knick, with Carey also crossing as Cramer fumbled the hit. The batter reached second on the fumble and scored as Sammy West dumped a single in short right. To this trio of St. Louis runs were added two in the sixth.

Homer No. 13 for Clift.

Clift started it with his thirteenth homer of the season, a whistling drive on Marcum's first pitch, high into the screen atop the left field wall. Manager Cronin lost Knick's grounder. Bill eased down to second on an infield out and then Pitcher Walkup sent him home with a single through McNair.

Ethan Allen had doubled off the left-field wall in the no-score fifth, but in the seventh he two-baggered to the left-field corner, took third on an infield out and then scored as Clift plunked a single to short left, so accounting for the sixth Brown tally.

Singles by West and Allen in the ninth and an infield out accounted for the seventh and last Brown tally.

Walkup walked three Sox and fanned three. Only seven men

HELD DEFEATS DAWSON, 6-5, IN SEMIFINAL OF T.-M. GOLF

By the Associated Press.

DENVER, June 26. — Golfdom's clock was turned back 11 years today as dapper Johnny Dawson, defending champion from Chicago, went down to defeat before the ruthless shotmaking of Eddie Held, 34-year-old St. Louis veteran, in the Trans-Mississippi tournament semifinals.

Held shot 2-under-par golf across Cherry Hills' rainsoaked fairways to erase the champion, 6 and 5.

Eleven years ago, when Held was only 23, he defeated Dawson to capture the second of his Trans-Mississippi titles. Now, after more than a decade, he has another crack at it.

Will Meet Schumacher.

Held will clash in the 36-hole final match tomorrow with Don Schumacher, 21-year-old "dark horse" from Dallas, who surprised the gallery by beating the more flashy Ed C. Kingsley, 22-year-old Salt Lake City gunner, 2 and 1.

The husky Texan shot his best golf of the tournament when he needed it most, traveling the 35 holes in one stroke under par.

The Dawson-Held engagement was "doped" as a tighter contest, but the Chicagoan did not play at the

HORSE BOUGHT BY MRS. MARS AT $4500 EARNS $26,000 FOR HER

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, June 26.—A brown streak of horseflesh named Tiger took the lead in the battle for the two-year-old championship of the American turf today by galloping to victory in the first running of the Washington Park Futurity.

The colt, purchased a year ago by Mrs. Ethel V. Mars of Chicago for $4500, defeated Menow, coupled with Bourbon King as the entry of Hal Price Headley of Lexington Ky., by two lengths, with Bourbon King third.

The race was the richest juvenile event run in America this year and had a gross value of $38,730, with $26,135 going to Mrs. Mars, owner of the famed Milky Way Farm Stable.

The winner, going to the post with Mountain Ridge as an entry, was a heavily-played favorite, returning $5.20 to win, $2.60 to place and $2.40 to show. The place price on Menow was $2.60, with $3.20 to show.

Fifteen thousand spectators witnessed the race, which closed the 30-day Washington Park meeting. The thoroughbreds start running at fashionable Arlington Park on Monday.

The winner, a son of Bull Dog—Starless Moment, was ridden by Jockey Alfred Robertson. Tiger ran the six furlongs in 1:11, only three-fifths of a second off the track record set by the older Silversmith.

At the start, Jockey Robertson had the Milky Way colt off in front. Lassator was away second, while Menow was also well up and Bourbon King fifth.

Tiger was never headed. Racing straight and true, in contrast to his earlier showings, Tiger led around the turn, keeping Menow always safely in the rear although the Headley colt was going his best to keep up with the pace-setter.

As they turned for home, Tiger held his lead by a length and a half, with Menow still second and at this point Bourbon King had moved into third place. The rest of the field was well back, and could not challenge the leaders.

Eight started. Robber Bold, injured in his stall last night, was scratched.

LARRY KELLEY TURNS DOWN CARDS' OFFER

Larry Kelley, allround athletic star of Yale University, has turned down the offer of the Cardinal baseball club for his services. The club announced yesterday that Kelley declined a $5000 bonus for his signature and told the Cardinals' Eastern representative that he will tour Europe this summer and take graduate work at Princeton next fall.

McCarthy DOES and McCarthy DOESN'T

John McCarthy, first baseman for New York, was kicking up dust all afternoon in the Cardinals' game with the Giants at Sportsman's Park yesterday afternoon. Here he is shown caught at the plate on Padgett's throw to Ogrodowski in the second inning.

Only an inning later, the third, McCarthy slides safely into third on a sprint from first base on Gus Mancuso's single off Jim Winford.

New York Pounds Mike Ryba for Five Runs in Three Innings—Redbirds Drive Melton Out of Box But Ex-Brownie Pitcher Stops Them.

By J. Roy Stockton.

Frankie Frisch, whose heart is full of box office, tried every trick in the bag in an eager effort to move the Cardinals into first place yesterday afternoon to make the Dizzy Dean-Hubbell pitching duel of today even more of a super-colossal feature, but Frankie made one mistake and before Mike Ryba, the Gas House Gang's starting pitcher, was out of the production, the Giants were on their way to a five-run lead and that was too much.

Jim Winford, relieving Dominic, the coal miner, hurled four brilliant innings; even Ray Harrell overcame his jitters and turned in a clever if spotty frame. And when the exigencies of trying to get runs necessitated Harrell's retirement for a pinch batter, Fordham Frank called on Bob Weiland and the long left-hander who had pitched a long hard game against the Dodgers on Thursday, stopped the Giants for the last two innings.

Cards Game Out of Tie.

But it all was to no avail and the Giants, by virtue of those five early runs off Ryba, made away with the second game of the series 5 to 3, and the Cardinals had to find what little consolation they could in the fact that the defeat of the Cubs by the good old Dodgers kept the Gas House Gang only one game out of a tie for the league leadership.

There also was consolation for Frisch in the relief pitching, consolation to make up for the disappointment at Ryba's failure to show the necessary qualities of a starter. Winford was not well warmed up when he first toed the rubber and there were two hits off his delivery in the third inning, to help the Giants to one of the runs charged to Mike's account. But after the third inning the St. Louis hurling was almost perfect. Two Giants walked and one reached first on an error, but they were the only New York base runners after the third frame as the Giants were turned back hitless for six consecutive frames.

And so perhaps Winford, the crack knuckleball expert of last year, but just a thrower through most of this year, is ready to bid for the fourth job in the starting pitching department and perhaps Harrell has overcome his complex and will help in the drive that Frisch hopes will lead to a pennant. As for Weiland, it was another feather in his cap, though a lot of extra work may go with it. For he showed that he could serve in relief, without too much rest between starting assignments.

Coffman Protects Lead.

Bill Terry, the cheerless leader of the Giants, was aided by excellent relief pitching, too. Cliff Melton, the tall left-hander from Baltimore, who throws a good curve with excellent speed, started for the National League champions and yielded only two hits in five innings. When he collapsed in the face of the hot sun and swishing Redbird bats in the sixth, an old friend named Dick Coffman, who once toiled for Rogers Hornsby and the Browns, stepped to the hill and protected what was left of the Giants' lead.

Despite a double by Burgess Whitehead, Ryba went through the first inning without trouble, but Mel Ott started the second with a single to right and when McCarthy singled to the same field and Pad-

DODGERS TRIM CUBS, 2 TO 1, IN 11 INNINGS

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, June 26.—The Brooklyn Dodgers outlasted Bill Lee and the Cubs today to win a 2-to-1 victory in 11 innings, when Long Tom Winsett doubled with two out to send the deciding run across.

The Dodgers had come from behind to tie the score in the eighth on Gil Brack's double and Joe Stripp's single, and finished on top in the second extra frame when Winsett produced to bring in Babe Phelps, who had singled.

Waite Hoyt, who started on the mound for the Dodgers, gave up five of the Cubs' six hits in the seven innings he worked. The Cubs got to him in the second for their only run, which was unearned. Max Butcher, returning to action after a lengthy illness, pitched one-hit ball for four innings to take credit for the victory.

The victory was the Dodgers' first in Chicago this year.

Still Pushing Max Around.

THE game of freeze-out still goes on in the heavyweight fight world, with Max Schmeling of Germany getting most of the refrigeration. A new low in temperature was reached with the announcement by Mike Jacobs, Czar of American ring affairs, that Schmeling now must fight Braddock, before getting a shot at Louis and the title!

This is the season's best laugh. It was Jacobs who interfered to prevent this very match from taking place on June 3.

Mike has everybody and everything in the fight world, including Jimmy Johnston's tongue, hog-tied. No moves can be made without Mike's O. K. He has Braddock and Louis under contract and Schmeling is on the cuff to Mike for a considerable sum, too. Mike is Mussolini and Hitler combined, so far as fight control goes.

But it is about time that the frozen-out Schmeling were defrosted. He has earned a little warmth, instead of a continuation of the icing.

CUNNINGHAM BEATS NURMI'S RECORD FOR MILE AND HALF

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 26.—Glenn Cunningham, holder of the world mile record, was successful in one-half of his campaign to annex two more records today when he ran a mile and one-half in 6:34 at the All-Sports Carnival held by the Metropolitan A. A. U. at Randall's Island Stadium.

Cunningham bettered the previous record of 6:42.9, made by Paavo Nurmi of Finland in 1925, by more than eight seconds. The mile and a half standard is not accepted as an official world record, however, being listed with the other odd-distance races under the heading of "noteworthy performances."

The speedy Kansan ran after a hurried automobile trip from Passaic, N. J., where he had failed in an attempt to break the world half-mile record at the New Jersey State championship meet. He ran a

PACIFIC COAST ATHLETES CRUSH BIG TEN SQUAD

By the Associated Press.

LOS ANGELES, June 26.—Pacific Coast Conference athletes defeated the Big Ten in a dual meet between picked squads before 20,000 spectators here today.

The point score was: Pacific Coast 92; Big Ten 44.

The winning four-man mile relay team of the Coast bettered the unofficial world's record when it was timed at 3 minutes 11.8 seconds. Washington State's mile relay team was timed at 3 minutes 12.3 seconds in the recent Pacific Coast Conference meet, better than the previous time of 3 minutes 12.6 seconds set by a Stanford team in 1931.

Meet officials said the mark today would be filed for new record consideration.

Today's coast team was composed of Harry Nettleton of Washington State and Bill McCurdy, Ray Malott and Jack Weiershauser of Stanford. They finished far ahead of the Big Ten quartette.

Led by University of Southern California's crack squad of N. C.

Dean and Hubbell Meet Today in Their Third Duel

DIZZY DEAN and Carl Hubbell will meet in their third duel of the season at Sportsman's Park this afternoon. Carl won from Dizzy here and Dizzy later defeated the star left-hander at the Polo Grounds. Hubbell will be trying for his tenth victory, Dizzy for No. 12.

A heavy advance sale indicates that today's contest may set a new park record for attendance at a single game. The fact that Dizzy and Hubbell would meet has been advertised through neighboring territory for a week.

The second game of the series attracted 6695 cash customers.

Branch Rickey and Carl Hubbell were honored before the game. Scrolls were presented to them certifying that they had been named by the Sporting News, baseball publication, as No. 1 men in the national game during 1936. Rickey as the outstanding business manager and Hubbell as the No. 1 player.

Medwick is in a fielding slump. Ordinarily he would have caught a drive like Bartell's double in the second inning.

Yankee Outsails Ranger but Race Is "No Contest"

By the Associated Press.

NEWPORT, R. I., June 26. — Gerard B. Lambert's Yankee today gave Harold S. Vanderbilt's undefeated candidate for defense of the America's Cup a severe troucing, but, because the yachts did not complete the course, Yankee was not credited with a victory.

It was the first time since trials opened that Ranger found herself losing a stern chase.

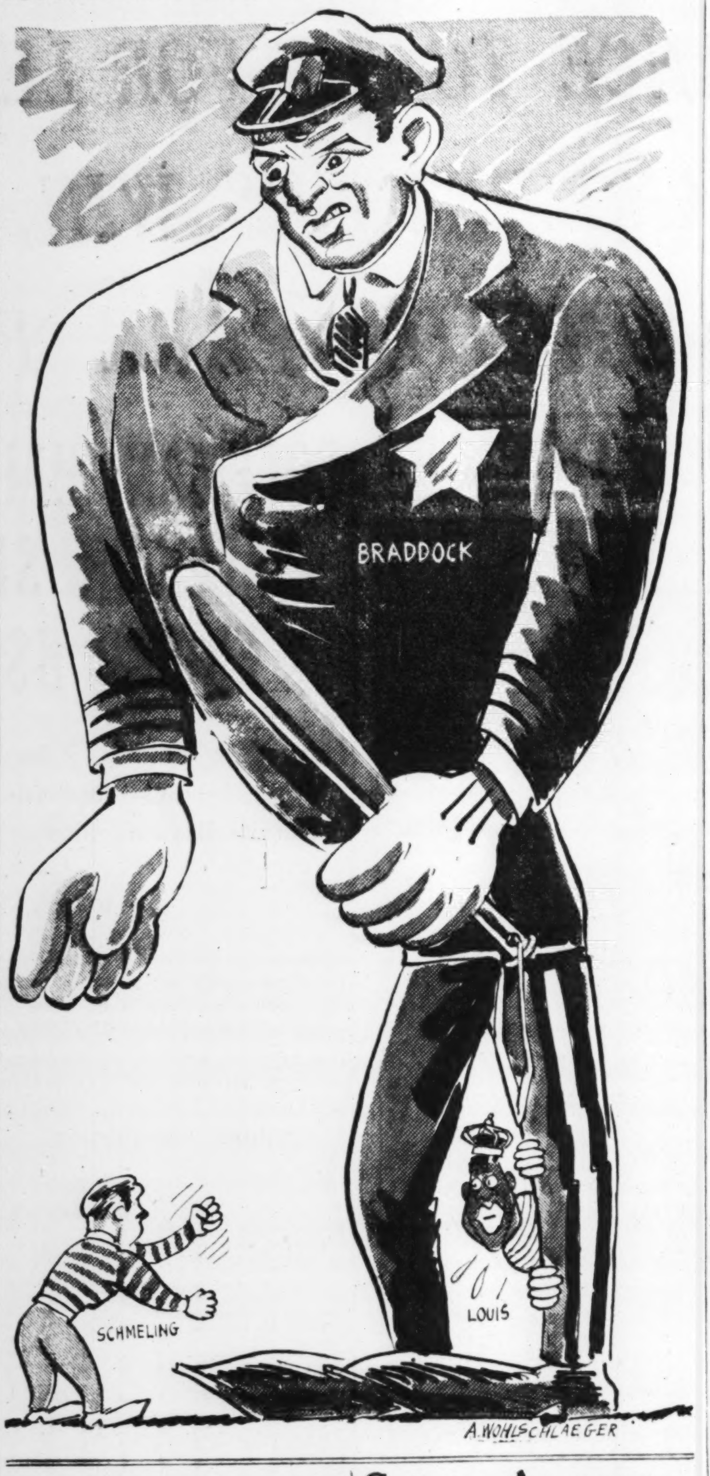
Yankee, veteran of the 1930 and 1934 cup campaigns, outfooted the new defense aspirant on almost every point of sailing and was drawing steadily away from her rival when Ranger quit the contest. The yachts then were about three miles from home, with 35 minutes remaining of the time allotted to the race.

Five minutes later Yankee's canvas also was furled and she, too, took a tow line.

Yankee's windward work previously had been her weakest point of sailing, but today it was her strongest.

The records will not show Yankee won, but the series of trials which ended today are known as observation races and the cup committee cannot fail to be impressed favorably by her performance.

Traded His Crown for a Badge



Boy Sets World Discus Mark, But It Is Unofficial

By the Associated Press.

PASSAIC, N. J., June 26.

AN 18-YEAR-OLD high school boy, Archie Harris of Ocean City, cracked a world's record during the New Jersey track and field championships today, but it didn't count.

He tossed the discus 175 feet 8 inches, compared with the record of 174 feet 2½ inches held by Willi Schroeder of Germany. The throw was nearly 40 feet better than the next best, but it wasn't official because Harris, a six-foot Negro, is registered with the Middle Atlantic A. A. U., and not the New Jersey Association.

Because of that technicality, meet officials said, the throw could not be offered for record consideration.

COAST ATHLETES CRUSH BIG TEN TRACK SQUAD

A. A. champions, the Coast Conference chalked up clean sweeps in the 440-yard dash, javelin, pole vault and discus.

The Big Ten, thanks to Indiana's great Don Lash and his teammates from the Midwest captured the mile and two-mile runs, one-two-three. The 440-yard relay saw the Coast quartette of George Boone of U. S. C., Curtis Ledford and Lee Orr of Washington State and Stanford's Jack Weiershauser negotiate the lap in 40.7 seconds, equalling the unofficial world's record time made by a Southern California team in 1936.

Southern California's thunderbirds, Bill Sefton and Earle Meadows, won the pole vault at 14 feet 6 inches, but missed at 15 feet one in three tries for a world's record. George Varoff, of Oregon, whose 14 feet 6½ inches was good for a world mark until the Trojan pair did 14 feet 11 inches a month ago, stopped at 14 feet today.

Don Lash won his two favorite events, the mile in 4 minutes 9.4 seconds, and the two-mile in 9 minutes 22.5 seconds—slow compared to his previous performances.

Chuck Beetham of Ohio State gained revenge in defeating his Trojan rival, Ross Bush, in the 880, but it was a near photo-finish. The winning time was one minute 52.4 seconds. Ross beat Beetham in the N. C. A. A. meet a week ago, both trailing Pittsburgh's Johnny Woodruff.

Woodruff ran an exhibition race against ex-Trojan Al Fitch today, but failed to make an impression in the 400-meter and 440-yard records.

The high hurdles found Troy's Roy Staley a comfortable winner in 14.6 as his chief rival, Bob Osgood of Michigan, went out of the picture after bumping a hurdle early in the dash. Osgood was unplaced.

Cooper Annexes True Temper Title

PHILADELPHIA, June 26.—Harry Cooper of Chicago won the 72-hole True Temper golf tourney today, posting a 38—30—68 last round score for an aggregate 280.

Going out in 38, two over par, Cooper came galloping along the back stretch, dropping five birdies for a record-shattering 30, six under par, for the $900 first prize money. Cooper's total score was 70-73-69-68—280.

The sensational rally of Cooper ousted Wiffy Cox, of Washington, D. C., from top honors. Cox shot a 35-34-69 card for a 282 to take the $600 second prize money. Cox's score was 69-72-72-69—282.

Jimmy Hines, of Garden City, L. I., Metropolitan champion, wobbled on both rounds for two 73's, giving him a 70-70-73-73—286 card and third prize money of $450.

HENDRIX MEETS HUNT TODAY IN FINAL MATCH AT "TRIPLE A"

By Davison Obear.

Joe Hunt, Los Angeles player, will oppose Arthur Hendrix of Lakeland, Fla., in the final round of the Triple A Club's open tennis championship this afternoon. The match will start at 2 o'clock and will be the best three out of five sets.

The United States Lawn Tennis Association for 1936 ranked Hunt No. 9 and Hendrix No. 10. This would indicate that Hunt is a fraction better than Hendrix.

Following the singles final Hunt and Hendrix will team in the final round of the men's doubles event. They will meet the winner of this morning's semifinal match [illegible] Teddy Eggmann and Frank Thompson and the team of Karl Hodge and McNeill Smith.

Hunt and Hendrix gained the final round of the men's doubles by defeating Frank Keaney and Ward Parker, Missouri Valley champions, 6—4, 6—3, 6—2, yesterday afternoon. The local team put up a splendid exhibition in the opening set but the visitors' offense was too good in the next two sets.

In the other semifinal doubles match, Hodge and Smith won the first two sets, 6—4, 7—5, from Eggmann and Thompson and then lost the next two, 6—4, 6—1. Play reached 5-all in games in the fifth set when play was called on account of darkness. The two teams will play the best two out of three sets this morning to decide which team will enter the final this afternoon.

Hunt moved into the final round of the men's singles through his straight set victory over McNeill Smith, 6—3, 6—0, 7—5. Smith played his best tennis in the third set, when he led, 5 to 4, but Hunt refused to yield and won it, 7-5.

Frank Keaney put up a very good battle against Hendrix in the other semifinal. There were a number of exciting exchange of volleys in this matter which delighted the capacity crowd. Hendrix won, 6—3, 7—5, 6—4. Keaney led 4 to 3 in the second set but failed to win it.

stead he turned on the lion and twisted his tail. Max did the unthinkable by knocking out Louis. He has never been forgiven this deed.

At the time, it seemed to remove the only opposition to his right to challenge for the title; and, as Braddock was not then in Jacob's hands, a match was arranged. A contract was signed. The fight date was set.

Then events began to happen about as follows:

A no decision bout at Atlantic City, between Joe Louis and Braddock was proposed by Jacobs. But it was killed when it was pointed out by Schmeling that Braddock could lose his title if knocked out.

The Braddock-Schmeling fight for September was called off when it was discovered that Braddock was suffering from "arthritis."

Later a new contract was drawn which called for a June fight between Champion Braddock and Schmeling.

Shortly afterwards the Anti-Nazi Association, strangely inspired, sent out announcements that it would boycott a Braddock-Schmeling fight if held as proposed.

Under cover of this, Braddock ran out of the second Schmeling contract and made a match for a later date in June with Joe Louis.

Schmeling, making his fourth ocean trip in a year, came to this country and went into training for the June 3 fight. But the courts failed to help him. His fight with Braddock did not take place.

Louis then fought and whipped Braddock and gained the title, the climax of what appears to have been a very definite plan to prevent Schmeling from reaping the just reward of his victory over Louis.

The Game of Freeze-Out.

NOW you'd think that with everything out of the way and the Negro in full possession of the title, Schmeling finally would be given a break and a chance at the champion.

Instead, Mike Jacobs now announces that Schmeling first must defeat Braddock before he will be given a chance at Louis.

It is the coldest game of freeze-out played since Tex Rickard, predecessor of Mike, froze Harry Wills out of a title fight with Jack Dempsey.

Schmeling deserves better. The American public would not tolerate such treatment of a fighter except one coming from Germany. The brand of Hitler, plus the fear that Max might again stop Louis, seemingly is at the back of the opposition to Max.

Perhaps Max might do well to come to this country and take on Braddock. Probably he could whip him, and then Louis would have no escape.

Not that we think Max would again whip Joe, but he has fairly earned a chance at the title. In any case, we all would like to see if he can repeat.

Fear that the title might be interned in Germany if Max won it, can be discounted. A champion who is not active is not a champion and a new titlist could then be declared.

Bootlegging the Dogs.

BETTING mutuels on dog races are not legalized in New York; but you may risk your money at any one of three tracks now operating in the metropolitan area. The mutuel bootleggers are doing a fine business, greyhound news items report.

In New England, Florida, California and other centers, dog racing is gaining ground and it seems only a question of time until consistency will force states which legalize horse mutuels to do likewise for the dogs. What's legal for horses obviously is legal for dogs, when it comes to betting.

No use in beating about the bush—the purpose of horse racing is not to improve the equine species, but to enable promoters to make money.

Except in one or two rare instances, there is no disinterested race track promoter. And experiments of the past have proved beyond debate that where there is no wagering on horses, there is no horse racing.

The sport of kings lies not in watching the thoroughbred run, but in trying to pick the winner for money.

That being the case the greyhound stands on just as firm a footing in demanding betting recognition as does the horse.

The best way to end the feverish demand for betting may be to turn it loose full blast, horses and dogs, and the overplay will end by killing the game or tiring out the public.

Then this whole thing will get back to normalcy. But this will not happen until a disgusted public has lost most of its spending money.

The Dogs Abroad.

IN England recognition of the dog mutuel betting was immediate. They did not attempt to say there that mutuels for horses were pure and holy and mutuels for dogs were immoral or against public welfare.

They let both alone and today the dog tracks are bigger even than the horse tracks, although they lack the publicity machinery to obtain the same notoriety.

As an example of what dog racing has advanced to in England it is estimated that 80,000 persons will attend the running of the dog derby final at White City tonight.

At this track, which is only one of half a dozen which operate simultaneously in the vicinity of London, they have installed a new totalizator. It cost $3,750,000 to build and that's $2,000,000 more than the cost of all the dog plants in America today.

The totalizator not only records mechanically every bet but reproduces on a central board the exact odds on each candidate in the race at any stage of the betting.

There are 326 betting windows for public use. On big nights as many as 1500 employees are required. Last year for the Derby the mutuels handled $500,000 on the one race.

Those figures are staggering. But let's not become jealous about this dog business. America is coming along pretty well, especially in Massachusetts where they have some very profitable tracks. Mutuel handles of over $200,000 forecast the growth of that method of wooing Lady Luck.

Because more persons have leisure at night, the future of dog racing is more certain than that of horse racing, in some vicinities. Free gates and smaller overhead—a dog track requires less than one-fourth as much to operate as a horse track—will draw the crowds and make profits more secure.

Growing Pains.

JUST now horse racing is suffering from growing pains. So many tracks are in simultaneous operation that there are not enough horses, jockeys or officials. Exercise boys are now getting the leg up on horses; fields in many cases are either thinly filled or crowded with crowbaits. Where all the officials bob up from is your guess.

Naturally races become more and more difficult to forecast as the average quality of the fields diminish. And as tracks in operation call for more than 15,000 horses in training, you are apt to find $100 horses running for $1000 purses, here and there.

It doesn't make sense to risk money on that sort of racing.

Our Racing Revival.

FAIRMOUNT, under new control but familiar management, will start Sept. 4 to run approximately a month. Robert S. Eddy Jr. will manage the meet for the new owners who, he says, prefer not to disclose their identity at this time.

Fairmount has had a career that, barring the first few years when Col. Winn and Bruce Head were operating, has had a hard struggle for existence. Finally it had to close. The group that purchased the track from Winn and Head, defaulted on a note, which has since been acquired by local men.

They are taking a chance. But there are conditions which favor the late summer meeting. Important among them is the completion of the new four-lane highway which handles traffic from St. Louis. It is not the only highway by which the track may be reached. In former years traffic congestion returning from Fairmount was bad enough to deter even the most courageous from remaining to the close of the day's racing.

The coming meet labors under a handicap in that it will not have any stake offerings or many stake horses to interest the public. It will be merely a mine-run meet and there remains a question whether patrons will pay money merely to bet, when they may remain in the city and wager at track odds.

The meet comes in with no high sounding names either among the promoters or the horses; but that does not necessarily mean that a good, square-shooting racing program can not be run off successfully. If the management conducts the meet in a manner to satisfy the patrons, it may lay the foundation of future success.

Sixteen girls have been paired for the qualifying round of the Woman's District Golf Association's junior tournament tomorrow at Norwood Hills. More entries will be accepted at the starting tee, officials have announced.

The second annual event of its kind, the tourney will be without a defending champion, since Miss Adele Bauer, who won the crown in 1936, is over the 18-year age limit. Among the favorites this year will be Mary Rosalie Sheridan, Forest Park, and Dorothy Jane Campbell, who will be playing her home course.

No club affiliation is necessary for entry but of the 16 entrants, only three were unattached.

Match play will start Tuesday, and there will be two flights, in addition to consolation divisions in each. A driving contest will be held Tuesday, and an approaching and putting contest Wednesday.

Pairings:

8:30 a. m.—Mary R. Sheridan, Forest Park, and Dorothy Jane Campbell, Norwood Hills.
8:35 a. m.—Irene Killian, Forest Park, and Mary Rogers, Algonquin.
8:40 a. m.—Marion Mueller, unattached, and Marie Doenges, Norwood Hills.
8:45 a. m.—Jane Bates, University City, and Marilyn Taylor, Glen Echo.
8:50 a. m.—Betty Emerson, Norwood Hills, and Helen Joanne Taylor, Glen Echo.
8:55 a. m.—Adele Emerson, Norwood Hills, and Mary Curran, Glen Echo.
9:00 a. m.—Ruth Prater, unattached, and Mary Louise Mullen, unattached.

Junior Boys' Begin Tuesday.

The annual district junior golf tournament will start Tuesday morning at Crystal Lake Golf Club, with Jonas Weiss of Crystal Lake in the role of defending champion. Players under 21 years of age are eligible to compete.

PARKER TO PLAY HENKEL; BUDGE PAIRED AGAINST VIVIAN M'GRATH

the Associated Press.

WIMBLEDON, England, June 26—A crowd of 25,000 swarmed over Wimbledon, filling every stand and choking passageways today as the decks finally were cleared for the second week's vital play in the all-England tennis championships.

Completion of the fourth round of men's singles found three Americans, two Germans, two Australians and one Englishman qualified to play in the quarter-finals Monday. There seemed nothing much more certain in the world than that America's red-headed Don Budge would meet Baron Gottfried von Cramm of Germany next Friday for the championship relinquished by Fred Perry.

Von Cramm Impressive.

Von Cramm, in overwhelming Gene Mako of Los Angeles, 6—0, 6—2, 6—3, in a fourth-round match looked just about as impressive as did Budge yesterday in trimming Ladislaus Hecht of Czechoslovakia.

The German needed only 12 minutes to polish off the first set and, hitting more severely than a year ago, moved through the next two without being extended at any point. Von Cramm had the situation so well in hand at all times that he seldom moved up to the net. Mako's charges to forecourt invited disaster for four times out of every five the Baron passed him with perfect shots down the side lines.

Henry Wilfred (Bunny) Austin of England and Jack Crawford of Australia gained ridiculously easy passage into the quarter-finals, but Heinrich Henkel, second-ranking German, had a dour struggle on his hands before he could subdue the rising young British southpaw, Charles Hare, 6—4, 3—6, 3—6, 6—2, 6—3.

Austin Beats Lacroix.

In strong contrast to Henkel's troublesome day, Austin crushed Andre Lacroix of Belgium, 6—2, 6—1, 6—0, and Crawford, the only unseeded player to qualify for the last eight, disposed of L. Shaffi of Great Britain, 6—4, 6—3, 8—6.

Monday's quarter-final round pairings will send Budge against Vivian McGrath of Australia, and Frankie Parker of Milwaukee against Henkel in a pair of duels on the No. 1 court. The center court attractions will be Bryan M. (Bitsy) Grant of Atlanta against Austin and Von Cramm against Crawford.

Meanwhile play in the women's singles division moved ahead in halting fashion with three of the favorites, Alice Marble, the United States champion, Dorothy Round of England and the Countess de la Valdene, the former Lili de Alvarez, qualifying for the fourth round.

Miss Marble defeated Mollie Lincoln of England, 6—1, 6—0; Miss Round disposed of Miss G. Terwindt of Holland, 6—2, 6—2; and the Countess Valdene won from Miss Alex McCostrich of Ireland, 6—4, 6—2. Miss Round and the Countess Valdene will meet in the fourth round Monday when the other principal woman's singles feature will send Mme. Rene Mathieu of France against Mrs. M. R. (Phyllis Mudford) King.

Miss Jacobs Advances.

Helen Jacobs, the defending champion and top-seeded player, and Mme. Hilda Krahwinkel Sperling of Denmark and Germany, reached the fourth round several days ago but will not see singles competition again until probably Tuesday.

Miss Jacobs and Mme. Sperling teamed up to win a second round doubles match from Miss M. Baumgarten of Hungary and Mrs. W. Merricks of Great Britain, 6—1, 5—7, 7—5. Dorothy Andrus of Stamford, Conn., and New York, also gained the third round with a 6—0, 7—5 decision over Mrs. C. P. Brutton and Miss S. G. Schuter of Great Britain.

Men's doubles competition saw the elimination of Grant and Wayne Sabin of Hollywood, Cal., after a spectacular duel with the crack Czechoslovakian combination of Hecht and Roderich Menzel, 5—7, 9—7, 6—4, 6—1. Parker and his Italian partner, Giorgio de Stefani, won from E. D. Andrews of New Zealand and Ferucio Quintavalle of Italy, 6—4, 1—6, 6—3, 6—3 and qualified for the third found.

In mixed doubles, Budge and Miss Marble won a third round match from D. W. Butler and Miss Round, 6—2, 4—6, 6—1.

MARTHA BIXBY WILL PLAY JANE DIERBERGER FOR TENNIS TITLE

Martha Bixby will meet Jane Dierberger in the final round of the St. Louis District girls' singles tennis championship at Lewis Park this afternoon at 3 o'clock. Miss Bixby is the defending champion.

Miss Dierberger gained the final bracket by defeating Rebecca Wells, 6—4, 6—2, in a semifinal match yesterday. Miss Bixby is champion of Mary Institute, while Miss Dierberger recently won the Roosevelt High School girls' singles championship.

GRANT TO MEET AUSTIN IN QUARTERFINALS AT WIMBLEDON

By Herman Wecke.

Although the matter of selection is strictly up to the rival managers—Joe McCarthy, of the American Leaguers and Bill Terry of the National—there is a good chance that eight St. Louis players will be honored with invitations to compete in the major league All-Star game at Washington, July 7.

Of this total five are with the Cardinals and three with the Browns.

Members of the Cardinals who this season have compiled records which warrant their selection on an All-Star team are Joe Medwick, Pepper Martin, Johnny Mize, Dizzy Dean and Lonnie Warneke. The Brownies with outstanding performances to their credit are Beau Bell, Sam West and Harlond Clift.

There's no doubt about Medwick. In the National League batting race, Medwick just about leads in everything. In addition, he is fielding in sensational style, so when the opening lineup for the National Leaguers is announced, Jersey Joe will be in left field. Medwick is hitting better than .400 for the season and getting better each week. He's tops in runs scored, runs batted in, total hits, doubles and home runs. You couldn't ask more from one player and for the same reason can't keep a man who has performed all those feats off an All-Star club.

Martin a Great Threat.

The colorful Pepper Martin is outhitting all center fielders in the National, with 321, and he's a threat everytime he gets on the bases. Mize, with .356, is the best batting first sacker in the circuit and in addition, he has been coming up with some remarkable fielding plays. Lonnie Warneke, with a 9-2 record ranks as one of the leading pitchers of the year, while there's still only one Dizzy Dean, despite his record which shows 11 victories and five defeats. Some time ago, Dean is said to have remarked that he would not accept if invited. But he'll be there if Bill Terry asks him to pitch against the American Leaguers. Dizzy will pass up no opportunity to boost his stock.

As regards the Browns, Beau Bell, the silent man from Texas, who lets base hits do his speaking, is again outdoing Joe DiMaggio, star juvenile of the Yankees. Bell, who for quite a time topped the batters in the American, is now clubbing .356, whereas DiMaggio, off to a late start, has a swat mark of .341. West, who has come strong in recent contests, is hitting .333.

Clift Batting .315.

Then there's Harlond Clift. He's the best hitting hot-corner guardian in the Harridge circuit this season. Clift's figure is .315, whereas Pinky Higgins, of the Red Sox, comes next with .309.

There's little doubt but that each of the All-Star teams will be equipped with a real "All-Star" pitching staff. For instance, how would seven-man staffs, representing each league, made up of the following look:

National League—Lon Warneke, 9-2; Cy Blanton, 8-4; Lou Fette, 8-3; Carl Hubbell, 9-4; Dizzy Dean, 11-5; Van Mungo, 8-5, and Bill Lee, 7-6.

American League — Monte Pearson, 5-0; Tommy Bridges, 8-2; Charley Ruffing, 7-2; Monte Weaver, 7-3; Monte Stratton, 7-4; Bob Grove, 6-3, and Lefty Gomez, 8-6.

There's not a manager who would not like to have at his disposal a pitching staff made up of stars of the above caliber, especially when backed by batting strength and fielding skill such as the two All-Star team leaders will be able to place on the field.

Only Two Under .300.

Take the National League for instance. Terry could start with an infield made up of Mize, Billy Herman, of the Cubs; Arky Vaughan, Pirates and Pinky Whitney, of the Phils. Then he could use another with Camilli, Kampouris, Jurges or Bartell and Hack. Of this lot, Bartell and Hack are the only players under the .300 mark.

For the outfield, there would be Medwick, Pepper Martin and Paul Waner to start, with Demaree, Klein and Joe Moore in reserve.

Gabby Hartnett and Al Todd appear the best catchers in the National League on the season's records.

Big League Ball Players' Union Proposed by New York Fan

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 26.—An individual attempt to promote a big league ball players' union, for possible affiliation with the C I O or A. F. of L., came to light at the Yankee Stadium today.

Members of the Detroit Tigers Club, before taking the field against the New York Yankees, revealed they had received letters urging them to organize, for the protection of their "rights" and inviting an expression of views on what unionized course they might desire to follow.

The letters were signed by one James Merrill, identified as a "distributor," with offices at 25 West Forty-third street. Merrill was out of town. His secretary said similar letters were addressed to ball players on all 16 major league clubs. An associate added that Merrill was a "fan," who had undertaken an independent effort to sound out the players on the subject of union organization, after talking with several big leaguers personally.

It was said at Merrill's offices that no definite plan had been proposed nor any baseball officials consulted.

Merrill's letter, which neither the Tigers nor Yankes appeared to take seriously, stated his purpose was to end "the domineering, slavish treatment of ball players."

CAPTAIN HAGEN IS DISSATISFIED WITH PRACTICE OF RYDER TEAM

SOUTHPORT, England, June 26. —Bounded by a graveyard and a terrifying range of sand dunes and swept for the first time in a week by a stiff wind, the Southport and Ainsdale course frightened America's picked professional golfers today into full realization of the task that lies ahead of them if they are to retain the Ryder Cup against Great Britain here Tuesday and Wednesday.

The sup-par scores that had marked the Americans' first tussles with the layout were conspicuously absent today. Non-playing Capt. Walter Hagen divided his squad into pairs in preparation for Scotch foursomes play and was far from satisfied with the results.

Only the combination of Ralph Guldahl, United State Open golf champion, and Tony Manero, whom Guldahl dethroned, shaped up satisfactorily. The other pairs failed to click under the wind conditions that prevailed.

He was bothered particularly by a jittery putter, losing the battle on the thirty-first green when he missed a putt of less than three feet.

Held made every post a winning one, going 1 up at nine, 4 up at lunch and 3 up when they turned 27.

Clings to Lead.

Held clung tenaciously to his lead as the afternoon round moved through hole after hole. He lost the twentieth when his second shot dropped short of the green, but for every other hole on that nine, the players' cards read identical.

Turning into the home stretch, Held began shooting the sort of golf that, probably as far as Dawson is concerned, makes him still the champion.

He captured the 379-yard twenty-eighth by sinking a 10-foot putt for a birdie 3 and banged another birdie on the 511-yard twenty-ninth. His chip shot nearly went in for an eagle.

Dawson held his foe even on the short thirtieth, but said goodbye to the title when his putter failed him on the thirty-first.

Held, after winning the "Trans" title from Dawson in 1926 and before that in 1923, moved to New York and was out of competition in this 37-year-old event for a number of years. Recently he moved back to St. Louis.

In tomorrow's title clash it will be youth and power against experience and cool accuracy.

LOUIS TO BOX ABROAD DURING SUMMER, SAYS MIKE JACOBS

NEW YORK, June 26.—Mike Jacobs, the man at the throttle of the heavyweight parade, threw it wide open on his return to Broadway from Chicago.

He definitely announced his newly-crowned heavyweight champion, Joe Louis, will fight abroad this summer, probably in the Wembley Arena, London, in August.

Mike ordered his attorney, Sol Strauss, to sail on the S. S. New York at midnight to close for an August bout between Louis and either Ben Foord, the South African; Jack Doyle, the Irish Thrush, or Len Harvey.

"I have had a half dozen trans-Atlantic telephone conversations with Arthur Elvin, Wembley Arena promoter," said Mike. "Almost everything has been agreed to except an opponent. Elvin says he can get either Foord, Harvey or Doyle and they are agreeable to us if we can't have Tommy Farr."

Farr, conqueror of Maxie Baer, already has signed to fight Max Schmeling for promoters of the Harringay Stadium.

Jacobs, who has Louis signed to a new contract covering five years, plans to keep the Negro busy. He expects to have him back here for a title shot with Schmeling in New York, Chicago or Detroit in September.

Plans are for Louis to go to England in mid-July to complete training for his first start since his smashing knockout of James J. Braddock in Chicago last Tuesday night. Joe now is resting at the Stevensville, Mich., farm of Julian Black, on of his managers.

Meantime, the deposed champion who apparently is just as popular as when he wore the crown, is not lacking offers.

Jacobs Rejects Offer to Bring Louis Here.

An effort to bring Joe Louis, new world heavyweight boxing champion, to St. Louis for a fight with Isidore Gastanaga failed yesterday, when Mike Jacobs refused a $35,000 offer from promoters here.

The New York promoter, in answer to a query about the offer made by Larry Atkins, representing Thomas N. Packs Sports Enterprises, sent the following reply:

The $35,000 was offered Louis to fight Gastanaga in August here over the 15-round route and contained an alternate provision that Louis could take 40 per cent of the net receipts.

Louis was matched with Gastanaga in Havana last winter but the bout never materialized as Jacobs, after a visit to the Cuban capital, declared conditions in the country were such that Joe would be in danger in that city.

Atkins said Gastanaga had agreed to meet Louis before the offer was rejected.

paced 880 yards in 1:57.8, as compared to Ben Eastman's record of 1:49.8.

Cunningham had the track all to himself in the one and one-half mile race. Joe McCluskey of the New York Athletic Club, took the lead at the start. Cunningham trailed him for a lap, then moved up to set his own pace. He had a three-yard advantage over McCluskey at the half-mile mark and pulled away steadily to complete the mile in 4:25, 30 yards ahead of the former Fordham runner. Ernest Federoff of the Millrose A. A., New York, and Joseph S. Alexander of the Passon A. A., Philadelphia, were third and fourth.

Denis Shore, South African Olympic runner, also got an even break in two performances. He finished second in the 300-yard run, a yard back of Jimmy McPoland of the New York A. C., former Georgetown runner, then won the 600-yard special by three yards from Jimmy Herbert, freshman sensation at New York University, who ran for the New York Curb Exchange, and Howard Borck of the Sixty-ninth regiment.

Shore ran the 600 in the good time of 1:10.7, a second and a half slower than Eastman's official world record. McPoland's time for the 300 was 31.4.

MODIFIED BASEBALL TRIAL GAME TODAY

An experimental game of modified baseball will be played this afternoon at Maplewood Softball Park, starting at 2 o'clock, with the players, nine on a side, using a softball 10 inches in diameter. The pitching distance will be 55 feet and the bases will be 82 feet apart. The ball will be pitched overhand.

Several other exhibition games will be played later and if spectators seem to like it, a league will be formed for games next season.

SPORT SALAD

Nice Going, John!

WITH gusto, the conquering heroes we hail,
An orchid, Fair Harvard to you!
You put it all over the oarsmen from Yale,
And the Crimson waves over the Blue!

To be self-reliant and go it alone
Is manly and worthy indeed,
But in rowing, we frankly and freely will own
That must have a pull to succeed.

Joe Louis admits under the softening influence of a heaping plate of fried chicken that his public training camp exhibitions were for Mr. Riley, the press and the one-a-minute boys.

AN HONEST confession is good for the soul
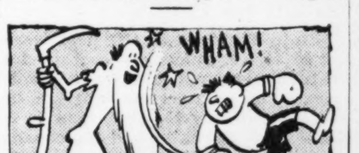
But it won't help the boys who were betting their roll
On Braddock to capture the fight.



Gene Tunney remarked after the fight, "You can't beat old Father Time." Gene ought to know. He had old Dad Tempus in corner both times when he took Jack Dempsey.

"Talking Fountains May Feature Fair."

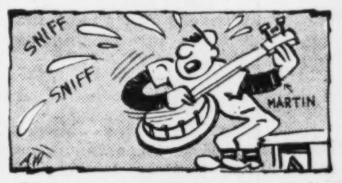
The Broken Record.

Just before the fight, Joe Louis received a phonograph record entitled, "You Can't Take That Away From Me," and a card signed James J. Braddock. However, the fight turned out better than what many consider the world's worst song.

See where "Fiddler" McGee, who warmed up in St. Louis for a game that he pitched in Columbus, O., recently let down the Milwaukee Brewers with two hits and struck out 13. Pepper Martin has never been the same since his first-string fiddler was taken away from him.

"PEPPER" MARTIN now sobs with emotion
"Oh, where is my Fiddler McGee?
Won't somebody second the motion
To bring back my Fiddler to me.

Bring back, bring back,
Bring back my Fiddler to me, to me;
Bring back, bring back,
Bring back, bring back,
Oh, bring back my Fiddler to me."



If the promoters had staged that bout on July 9 they could have celebrated the 182nd anniversary of Braddock's defeat at Duquesne.

A Bum Steer.

JOE LOUIS in the training camp
Was hardly up to snuff;
But in the ring the coming champ
Was plenty good enough.

The camp's no place for one to test
The merits of a bout;
So after all perhaps it's best
To simply throw it out.

Cards Miss Chance to Tie For Lead as Giants Win, 5-3

gett fumbled, Ott reached third and McCarthy second.

The rattled Ryba walked Chiozza, filling the bases and after Mancuso popped out, Melton singled to right, scoring Ott. Padgett's throw to the plate nailed McCarthy trying to follow Ott over the plate, but Chiozza reached third and scored with Melton when Bartell doubled over Joe Medwick's head.

Ryba then retired Whitehead to end that inning, but Joe Moore opened the second with a single to right, took second on Padgett's fumble and when Ripple slapped a single to center, scoring Joe Moore, Frisch realized that Ryba didn't have what it took to beat the Giants.

Away to Five Run Lead.

McCarthy's single off Winford sent Ripple to third and Jimmy scored on Mancuso's liner which caromed off the speeding Jimmy Brown's glove and that made the score Giants 5, Cardinals 0.

Two were out in the sixth when the Cardinals put on their lone productive rally of the afternoon and there was a bit of luck in the start of it. Brown hit a hopper down third base way and when it bounced over Chiozza's head, the fleet-footed Brown turned it into a double. Padgett bounced a single off Melton's glove, moving Brown to third and Medwick whacked a bounding single to left, scoring Brown. Mize lined one past the box and out to center field, scoring Padgett and moving Medwick to third and Terry left the dugout.

There was a long conference on the mound, while Dick Coffman warmed up. The umpires have great respect for the cheerless leader that way. When Frisch goes out to talk to a pitcher, the umpires rush from all sides, to insist that he do something, either remove the pitcher or let the play go on. But it was a hot day and Terry was permitted to chat with his boys until Coffman was ready.

Then one of the umpires ran out to tell Coffman that Terry wanted him and when Gutteridge greeted Coffman with a single to center, Medwick scored with the third and final Redbird run of the day.

Medwick Walks, Mize Pops Out.

There was only one other situation that looked promising. Medwick walked with two out in the eighth and the stands hoped that Mize would hit a long one. But with the count three and two, Coffman threw a half speed ball, insisting that Mize furnish his own power. John didn't connect solidly and his pop fly to Bartell ended the inning.

Oh yes, Gutteridge walked to start the ninth, but he was still there when the game ended. Durocher struck out, Frisch batted for Ogrodowski and flied to George Davis and Stuart Martin, batting for Weiland, tapped to Coffman.

And so the Giants once more are only a game behind the Cardinals in the merry pennant race.

Ernest Sutter Retains College Tennis Title

By the Associated Press.

HAVERFORD, Pa., June 26.—Ernest Sutter of Tulane University today retained his national intercollegiate tennis singles championship, sweeping through Gerin Cameron, Tulsa University, 6—2, 6—2, 6—2, on the turf courts of the Merion Cricket Club.

The Sutter family now can place the fourth college titular trophy on its mantle. Ernest's brother Clifford won the championship on the same court in 1930 and 1932. Ernest captured his first title last year on the clay courts of Northwestern University.

The doubles championship was won by the University of California team of Richard Bennett and Paul Newton. They defeated Norman Bickel and Norbert Burgess, University of Chicago, 6—3, 3—6, 6—1, 9—7.

CHARLTON CLUB 7-0 VICTOR OVER PENN ALL-STARS

By the Associated Press.

PHILADELPHIA, June 26.—The Charlton Soccer Club of England made a mighty splurge of six goals in the last half today to defeat the Pennsylvania All-Stars, 7 to 0, for the tenth straight victory of its American tour.

George Tadman sank four of the late goals and Don Welsh accounted for the other two. George Stevenson sent the only one through the net in the first half. Tadman is recognized as one of England's outstanding forwards.

The Britons taxed their opponents in the first half with a low, short passing style, but Denton, American Olympic goalie, made some sensational stops. The Pennsylvanians' defense weakened after the half.

Welsh started the second half runaway with a short shot while players of both sides were bunched about the goal. Tadman followed with a pair of counters.

After passing to Welsh for that player's second goal, Tadman put on the best show of the day by dribbling through the entire Pennsylvania back field for his last two scores.

Stephenson's first half tally was a sensational high thrust from 10-yard line.

The lineups:

CHARLTON (7)	Position	PENNSYL. (0)
Bartram	G.	Denton

WILLIS JOHNSON, CLUB PRESIDENT, PUT OUT OF HIS PEORIA PARK

Willis E. Johnson, who for years was secretary of the Browns and who now is president of the Peoria Club in the Three-I League, has the distinction of being put out of his own ball park, it was learned yesterday.

It came about in this manner: Johnson became involved in an argument with an umpire about turning on the lights in the park because it was getting dark and Johnson feared that a player might be injured. The umpire said in effect that he would tell Johnson when it was necessary to turn on the lights. One word led to several and finally the umpire ordered Johnson off the field. The president was slow to go, so the arbiter called a policeman and Johnson was removed from the park.

SEABISCUIT NOSES OUT ANEROID IN BROOKLYN HANDICAP

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 26. — C. S. Howard's crack California campaigner, Seabiscuit, outlasted John A. Manfuso's speed marvel, Aneroid, in a spectacular stretch duel at Aqueduct today and won the forty-ninth Brooklyn Handicap and $18,025 by a nose.

Boosts Earnings to $64,000.

The winner, second choice in the betting to Aneroid at 16 to 5, was clocked in 1:50 1-5 for the mile and an eighth and boosted his 1937 earnings to $64,000.

A crowd of nearly 15,000 saw Seabiscuit and Aneroid hook up in one of the finest speed duels of the season. Seabiscuit was sent to the front, raced Bulwark into submission but had to be hard driven to earn the decision in a photographic finish.

Aneroid, eased back in the run down the backstretch, moved up with a terrific rush around the turn and appeared the winner at the furlong pole. He hung, however, in the final run and Seabiscuit, coming up again, just got up to win. Aneroid was the 13 to 5 choice in the betting.

Rosemont Tires.

Rosemont, coupled with Gold Seeker as the Foxcatcher Farms entry and held at 9 to 2 in the betting, was well up for half a mile but tired then and was never thereafter a factor. Gold Seeker finished fifth behind the Maemere Farm's Maeriel.

Seabiscuit, a four-year-old bay son of Hard Tackswing On, shouldered 122 pounds as did Aneroid. Rosemont was highweight of the field at 127. Aneroid's defeat came after the Manfuso color-bearer had won five of his six starts this year and appeared headed for the title in the handicap division.

Former Football Star.

CLEAR weather for the past week throughout the State in general has done its part in clearing up the once muddy Ozark streams. At the present time most of the rivers and lakes are in very good condition and excellent catches are being reported. Expected good weather for the next week will give celebrators of the Fourth of July some of the best fishing of the season.

The Big Niangua arm of the Lake of the Ozarks is rapidly clearing and good fishing is being enjoyed in that part of the Lake. Due to warm weather of the past few days most angling has been confined to early morning and evening. E. C. Lowell of the Niangua Bridge Boat Dock reports limits of big mouths being taken regularly on "plunker" surface lures. Also quite a number of Silver Bass are attracted by the June bug spinners. Crappie are expected to be in full stride by the 4th although they have shyly avoided all lures during the recent rise in the Lake.

Water south of Versailles is also in excellent shape at the present with the Little and Big Gravois, Indian Creek, Cedar, Bogue and Mill Creek giving up their share of the finny ones. In that part of the Lake the full reservoir stage has carried the water over grass, shrubs and weeds of the bank making ideal spots for feeding bass and crappie.

Perfection Point.

According to the Missouri Game and Fish Department conditions are rapidly nearing the 'perfection' point which they might easily reach for the three day vacation on tap for next week-end. A brief summary of conditions throughout Missouri with their expected July 4th conditions are as follows:

With the above mentioned Lake of the Ozarks' conditions are a few additions to make to Missouri's largest lake. Main channel of the Osage is murkey but clearing in the coves. Glaze Arm is clear 2-miles above Highway No. 54 bridge. Tributary creeks in the vicinity of Warsaw in Benton County are clear while good bait fishing is being enjoyed on Osage below Bagnell Dam. All Lake of the Ozarks is expected to be in excellent condition by Friday barring any severe rains.

In the southeastern part of the state we also have good reports. Lake Taneycomo is at its normal stage; White River is rapidly clearing although still somewhat flush; Long Creek in Taney County at Oasis and Crane Creek at Oto are in fair fishing condition and are at normal stage. The James River is also clearing. All of these streams as well as the lake should be in excellent shape by the coming week and at present best results are being obtained by the use of live bait and plugs.

Anglers are relying on live bait on the Gasconade, Meramec, Big Piney and the Maries but artifical lure enthusiasts should get in their best casts after July 1. As usual with the fast moving trout streams Bennett Spring, Roaring River and Montauk are in excellent condition, as is the Black River in Reynolds County.

With another three-day week-end on the docket, for the fourth will be celebrated on Monday the fifth this year, reservations will undobutedly be reaching up toward new high marks at the various Ozark resorts. State Park keepers and resort owners urge that reservations for accommodations and boats be made in advance. There were numerous persons sorely disappointed at not being able to find lodging on the opening day of this season and such inconveniences could be easily avoided by dropping a card to your favorite resort.

Arrests for Catfishing.

State Wardens in the past week have made numerous arrests for catching channel catfish out of season. The channel cat will not be legal until July 15. Wardens B. J. Scheve of Franklin and Gasconade counies and Charles Fleetwood of the Lake of the Ozarks were most active in making the arrests. The latter reports catching one fisherman with 20 channel cats.

The Audubon Societies of Missouri, represented by their president, Sterling P. Jones and Tom Kirksey, St. Louis — d Club leader, formally accepted upon behalf of the Societies, the Springdale Bird Sanctuary on the outskirts of Cape Girardeau. The sanctuary consists of about 20 acres of very heavily wooded land which will be administered under the direct supervision of the Societies. The gift, from Judge and Mrs. I. R. Kelso of Cape Girardeau, is the first permanent sanctuary ever tendered the State.

Sportsmen of Wisconsin, appreciative of the fine fishing and hunting available to them, largely through the constructive program of fish and game preservation of the State Conservation Department, are going to participate more actively in the program by purchasing a general sportsman's license covering hunting, trapping and fishing. Minimum annual cost of $5 but sportsmen are given an opportunity to pay any amount they desire, and, so far, seem to be contributing generously toward the cause. Out of each fee, $3 goes into the regular license fund, the remainder to provide more public hunting and fishing grounds.

160 BEGIN PLAY TOMORROW IN COLLEGE GOLF

By the Associated Press.

OAKMONT, Pa., June 26. — The country's rah-rah golfers, pepped up to give the old college try, go after the national inter-collegiate championship here Monday over the same course where the professionals stomped and ranted and scored ridicuously high in the National Open two years ago.

And the undergraduate hopefuls have been finding the 6981 yard Oakmont Country Club course just as tough as did the salaried experts.

A couple of the boys have puffed and perspired around the par-72 layout in 73's but most of the players considered it a moral victory when they broke 80.

The largest field in the tournament's history—160 golfers — are registered. They represent 37 colleges and universities. Twenty-six colleges are entered in the team championship.

Drunkenness Is a Disease!
This FREE Booklet Explains Facts That Every Person Should Know
HERE is a treatise written on the disease of inebriety and its cure, written especially for the Keeley Institute. It is based on 57 years' experience, embracing the treatment of more than 400,000 patients, including men and women from all walks of life.
It tells you "why" the medical profession recognizes drunkenness as a disease; what famous medical authorities say about the disease of drunkenness . . . and "how" drunkenness can be cured. The booklet is free, and mailed in a plain envelope. Write at once for your copy, NOW!

EXACTLY TO MY TASTE!

Personal preference!

Even though genuine beauty of any type has wide appeal, wins wide admiration, yet no two men think precisely alike on the subject. Opinions differ!

But where Van Dyck 32's are concerned, we know that a host of men believe Van Dyck to be the mildest, most companionable cigar they ever smoked! They bought over 140 million Van Dyck 32's last year—a new record for Van Dyck!

If you like a mild and friendly cigar—if you like expensive tobaccos—the firm, white ash that comes from a long filler—an aroma that captivates; if you like downright sweetness and mildness—downright smoking satisfaction, then you'll certainly like Van Dyck 32's.

Why not get acquainted with this outstanding cigar? Your introduction costs only a modest 5¢.

Frank Phillips Head For Twenty Years of Phillips Petroleum Co.

Employes of the Phillips Petroleum Company presented to Frank Phillips, president of the company, a unique service badge on the twentieth anniversary of the company. The badge, modeled after Shield service badges worn by Phillips employees, was four inches in diameter and made of brass from a valve used in the company's first gasoline plant through which passed the first natural gasoline it produced. Four silver stars, each representing five years of service with the company, were placed across the top of the badge indicating Phillips' 20 years of service as the company's president. The badge was made by employees of the Lima Gasoline Plant at Snomac, Ok.

The growth of the Phillips Petroleum Company in the 20 years of its existence has been remarkable. Incorporated June 13, 1917, with assets of $3,000,000, the Phillips Petroleum Co. now has gross assets of approximately $300,000,000. Expanding from an original organization consisting of 27 people, it furnishes employment directly and indirectly to approximately 28,000 people.

Engaging only in oil producing with but 12 producing leases at the start, the company has expanded to include all phases of the oil industry from producing oil and gas to the distribution of gasoline and motor oils to the consumer.

Before the company was six months old, it began making gasoline with one small plant with a daily production of 350 gallons. Today, with 38 gasoline plants, the company is the world's largest producer of natural gasoline. The Phillips' plant in Oklahoma City, which produces approximately 225,000 gallons a day, is the largest plant in the world.

The company now operates its own producing properties, pipelines, gasoline plants, refineries and distributing stations. Phillips 66 gasoline, first offered to the public less than 10 years ago, is sold in 19 states.

1,100,000 Revenue Passengers Carried By American Airlines

Some time in the last two days, American Airlines, Inc., carried its 1,100,000th revenue passenger. Half of the 1,100,000 persons, according to Charles A. New Development In Making Truck Tires by U. S. Rubber

A cushion shoulder, a new development in truck tire construction which dissipates heat and thereby lengthens tire life, is announced by U. S. Tire Dealers Mutual Corporation.

A cushion shoulder consists of a section of special compound, cool-running stock built into the truck tire tread, deep down in the shoulder below the point of smooth tread wear. This new construction feature generates less heat in the shoulder area, which is the dangerously high heat area, and it dissipates heat generated by the constant flexing of the cord body.

H. G. Noss, manager of the U. S. Truck Tire Department, said that truck tires, especially in heavy-load, high-speed operation, built up high temperatures. Readings as high as 365 degrees have been found under tread shoulders. Temperatures as high as 290 to 300 degrees are common.

High heat reduces tread mileage, destroys cord bodies, causes tread separation and blow-outs.

Cushion shoulder construction is now standard in all sizes of U. S. Royal fleet delivery, and in a number of sizes in U. S. Royal Fleetway and U. S. Royal rayon cord truck tires.

Shipments of De Soto Cars Into Missouri Up 87 Per Cent Over 1936

At the same time, the eight months' shipping total in Missouri of the 1937 car was 60 per cent ahead of the full year's shipping total of the 1936 model.

In St. Louis and Kansas City, 1509 cars were delivered to dealers as compared with 826 a year ago. The entire State received 1847 cars up to June 1 as compared with 988 up to June 1, 1936.

One Company Yearly Uses Rubber From 50,000,000 Trees

More than 50,000,000 rubber trees are required to produce the 75,000 to 80,000 long tons of crude rubber used annually by the B. F. Goodrich Co.

The average rubber-producing tree in the Far East yields three to four pounds of dry rubber yearly.

The average weight of rubber in a pneumatic tire, adjusted in accordance with the proportionate number of various sizes produced for passenger cars, buses, trucks, farm implements, tractors and other vehicles, is about 16½ pounds. So the total annual output of four or five trees is necessary for a tire.

Approximately 1,000,000 natives are engaged yearly in tapping and collecting latex from the 50,000,000 trees.

Air Service to Bermuda From Any Point on The Routes of TWA

Service by air to Bermuda from any point on the coast-to-coast system of Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., became a reality Tuesday with the inauguration of New York-Bermuda service by Pan American Airways and Imperial Airways, Ltd.

Through the new service, which requires five-hour flying time from New York, TWA passengers traveling on its eastbound Sky Queen will find a ready connection with the flying boats of the other two air systems. A traveler leaving Los Angeles on the Sky Queen at 9:15 a. m. (Pacific) will arrive at Newark at 5:55 a. m. (Eastern) next morning, and then leave at 7:30 o'clock for Bermuda. Arrival at the latter will be at the end of a five-hour trip by flying boat.

Arrival at New York from Bermuda, either by the Pan American or Imperial Airways flying boats, will be in time to connect westbound with TWA's Sky Chief flight whose schedule calls for a coast-to-coast journey of only 17 hours with the new skysleeper planes.

More than 50,000,000 rubber trees are required to produce the 75,000 to 80,000 long tons of crude rubber used annually by the B. F. Goodrich Co.

The average rubber-producing tree in the Far East yields three to four pounds of dry rubber yearly.

The average weight of rubber in a pneumatic tire, adjusted in accordance with the proportionate number of various sizes produced for passenger cars, buses, trucks, farm implements, tractors and other vehicles, is about 16½ pounds. So the total annual output of four or five trees is necessary for a tire.

Approximately 1,000,000 natives are engaged yearly in tapping and collecting latex from the 50,000,000 trees.

PART THREE ST. LOUIS, SUNDAY MORNING, JUNE 27, 1937. (C) PAGES 1—14C

By Berry Moore.

Demonstrating its faith in the future of this section, the Swope Shoe Co. has taken a 15-year lease on the double-store room, 40 by 105 feet at 905-07 Locust street, with basement in connection, in the Board of Education Building. The space leased comprises a total of 8000 square feet, with 4000 square feet on the first floor and 4000 square feet in the basement. It has a window frontage of 40 feet.

The lease calls for annual rentals of $8400 for the first five years, $9600 for the next five years, and $10,800 for the remainder of the term, or for total rentals of $144,000. It was negotiated by Arthur S. Martin & Son, in connection with Meade M. McCain, general manager of the Swope Shoe Company.

While not effective until Oct. 1, 1937, the shoe company will take possession of the premises Aug. 15, or as soon as they are vacated by Barry's, the present tenant, which has leased ground floor quarters at 317 North Tenth street, through Cornet & Zeibig.

Improvements to Cost $21,000.

The Board of Education has let contracts to the Smith-Cooke Construction Co. for alterations and improvements to the storeroom and the basement. These will include installation of a modern store front, and of an air-conditioning system. Cost of the improvements, to be borne by the Board, will approximate $21,000.

The Swope Company has occupied quarters at the southeast corner of Tenth and Olive street for the last 25 years. Prior to that time, it was located at 305 North Broadway, locating there when that thoroughfare was in its heyday. Its first location was in French Town, in South St. Louis, where it was establised 70 years ago by Meier Swope.

As heretofore, the shoe company will handle women's shoes, hosiery, handbags, and there will be a special co-ed department for junior and girls' shoes. The children's shoe department will be confined to Swope's uptown store at 4266 Maryland avenue.

A number of important retail concerns have staked their claims on Locust street within the last year or two, including, notably, the Leppert-Roos Fur Co., which acquired a 15-year lease on the five-story building at 919 Locust street, through the Breitt & Naumer Realty Co.

The Kennard Carpet Co. recently acquired a long-term lease on ground floor quarters at the southwest corner of Locust and Tenth streets. Negotiations in this instance were handled by Cornet & Zeibig.

Needed Impetus Given.

The needed impetus was given to this thoroughfare when Three Sisters, a women's apparel concern, operated by important retail interests with headquarters in New York, leased the first, second and third floors of the Dolph Building at the Northeast corner of Seventh and Locust streets, as was told in last Sunday's Post-Dispatch. This building, including the site, is controlled by the May Department Stores Co. under 99-year leases or in fee.

University City Homes Acquired

Decrease of 16 Per Cent From April, Shown in U. S. Department of Labor Review.

While there was an increase of 24 per cent in the aggregate value of May building permits over May 1936, there was a decrease of 16 per cent from April, Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins announced today. "Compared with the previous month, returns from the principal cities for May indicate a decrease of 22½ per cent in the value of new residential construction, a decrease of 10 per cent in new nonresidential construction, and a decrease of 9 per cent in the value of permits issued for additions, alterations and repairs to existing structures," she said.

"With the exception of additions, alterations and repairs, these decreases were much more pronounced in larger cities than in the smaller towns. For example, total construction decreased 18 per cent in cities having a population of 25,000 or over and only 10 per cent in cities and towns having a population of less than 25,000. The value of new residential buildings decreased 27 per cent in cities with a population of 25,000 or over and 12 per cent in those under 25,000. New nonresidential buildings showed a decrease of 13 per cent in the larger cities and showed an increase of 2 per cent in the smaller cities.

• May Rate of Activity

"The May rate of building activity was still above the level of a year ago. Measured by the value of permits issued, an increase of 28 per cent is shown in new residential construction, a gain of 23 per cent in new nonresidential construction and an increase of 17 per cent in additions, alterations, and repairs. The total value of the permits issued in the principal cities was 24 per cent greater than in May 1936.

"For the first five months of 1937 the aggregate value of all classes of building construction for which permits were issued in cities having a population of 2,500 or over which reported to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, amounted to $720,938,000, an increase of 36 per cent over the corresponding period of 1936. Gains were shown for each type of construction, the greatest increase occurring in the value of residential buildings which showed a gain of 58 per cent. During the first five months of 1937 dwelling units have been provided in these cities for 84,646 families, an increase of 60 per cent over the first five months of 1936."

Percentage Change

The percentage change from April to May in the number and cost of buildings for which permits were issued for each of the different types of construction in 1,549 identical cities having a population of 2,500 or over is indicated in the following table:

Class of Construction.	Change from April, 1937, to May, 1937. Number.	Estimated cost.

The volume of new financing coming into real estate mortgages is once more rising. It has reached 40.2 per cent of the volume we had in 1926, according to the index compiled for the National Association of Real Estate Boards from reports covering typical metropolitan centers over the country.

Meantime, however, real estate sales have advanced in volume to 61 per cent of the 1926 rate. They are back to the rate we were experiencing at the turn of the year 1929-1930. Sales reached their low in May of 1933. They have since shown a steady trend upward. The volume of real estate sales has increased nearly 80 per cent since the depression low.

The long term up pull of new mortgage investment began in mid-year 1933. Outside of the notable temporary bulge through 1934 due to H O L C operations the rise has been relatively slow, with a one-month setback at the beginning of the present year, which absorbed most of the preceding year's gain. For recent months, however, the climb has been the most rapid of the whole recovery period. May showed a gain of 1.8 points on the scale which uses the 1926 figures as 100. This is 4.7 per cent over the April figure.

If we disregard the temporary changes due to H O L C operations, we find that new real estate mortgage money is coming in at a rate higher than we have known it since the turn of the year 1931-1932.

Home Building Volume.

Do high building costs and a large volume of home building go hand in hand? Some people have believed they do. A recent study by the Department of Commerce indicates that this is not the case.

Taking the year 1926 as index base, the study as published in the April issue of the Survey of Current Business found that building costs in 1920 stood at 130 per cent of the 1926 level and in that same year residential construction was 60 per cent below the 1926 level, a disparity about as great as we had again in 1933. Then cost slid sharply down for three years and new home building made a rapid three-year up climb.

The maximum year for residential construction was the year 1925. In that year building costs, which had first leveled off, then made a slight rise, were again in a down trend.

Lemay Citizens to Erect Civic Building in Risch's Grove Comprising Six Acres.

Negotiations are progressing for Risch's Grove on Bayless avenue and Lemay Feery road, in Luxemburg, as a site for a building designed for a municipal center to be known at the City of Lemay.

The building is to be remodeled and altered at large outlay. It is just west of Vandeventer avenue, and is regarded as well situated for the purposes for which it has been acquired.

BUILDING IN ST. LOUIS AREA UP 58 PER CENT

Gain for 5 Months' Period Over 1936 Shown in Dodge Report.

Construction in the St. Louis and East St. Louis metropolitan area during the first five months of the current year was much larger in volume than in the corresponding period of 1936, according to C. S. Bennett, manager of the St. Louis office of the F. W. Dodge Corporation. His report is as follows:

"Total construction, which includes both private and public work, was 58 per cent larger than the 1936 five-month total. A comparison with the average gain of 17 per cent for total construction throughout the 37 Eastern States, shows that St. Louis and East St. Louis are far ahead of most of the country in construction activity. Local contract awards totaled $24,011,200 on May 31. In 1936, this figure was $15,153,300.

"Residential contracts awarded during the five-month period in the St. Louis and East St. Louis area, which includes St. Louis (Missouri) St. Clair and Madison (Illinois) Counties, made a gain of 30 per cent over the awards in those months of 1936. The dollar value of these contracts, at the close of May totaled $10,738,600, of which $9,733,300 was for new construction and $1,005,300 for alterations. The total on the same date in 1936 was $8,229,900.

"Contract awards for non-residential work, during January to May, totaled $5,062,100, an increase of 40 per cent over the 1936 total of $3,627,500. This local gain is much greater than the average recorded for the 37 States east of the Rocky Mountains, which is less than 10 per cent for non-residential building.

"All private construction in St. Louis and East St. Louis, taken as a group, advanced beyond the figures for the first five months of 1936, with a gain of 63 per cent. At the same time, Mr. Bennett points out, privately financed construction established a significant lead over the public construction contracts awarded during those months.

"The private work in the 1937 period amounted to $17,305,100, which compares favorably with the corresponding 1936 total of $10,608,800. The May 31 total for public construction was $7,706,100."

Estates . . . On Towering River Bluffs

This is more than a country home . . . this is a residence with background . . . a home that seems to take its beauty from its surroundings . . . all the majestic sweep of the river 150 feet below, all the distinguished nobility of the trees towering above. It is the ideal home for the family with an appreciation of the finer things . . . the family which wishes a home which in itself is a distinction. Close to the city, yet really in the country; eight large rooms, 3 baths, ideally arranged with air-conditioning heating unit; rock wool insulation; 3-car garage; servants' quarters; wood-burning fireplace, and screened-in sunroom. It must really be seen to be appreciated.

IN MEMORIAM

BECKENSTEDT, DORA—In loving memory of my dear mother who passed away one year ago June 28, 1936.
When a mother breathes her last farewell,
The stroke means more than a tongue can tell.
The world seems quite another place,
Without the smile of mother's face.
Sadly missed by daughter, MYRTLE.

Just a thought of sweet remembrance.

IN MEMORIAM

CHAPMAN, JOHN F.—In memory; died June 29, 1936.
O, what would we give to clasp his hand,
His dear, kind face to see,
To hear his voice, to see his smile,
That mean so much to us.
Some day we hope to meet him,
Some day, we know not when,
To clasp his hand in the better land.
Never to part again.
WIFE AND DAUGHTER.

HEUTEL, JOSEPH—In loving memory of our dear father, Joseph Heutel, who died June 27, 1931.
His memory is as dear today,
As in the hours he passed away.
Sadly missed by DAUGHTERS.

MEIER, SARAH — Passed away July 2, 1934. If I could have a single wish
One dream that might come tru
I'd wish that every one could have
A mother as sweet as you
CHILDREN AND GRANDCHILDREN.

MUELLER, WILLIAM A.—In memory of our dear husband and father who passed away June 24, 1932.
Five long years have passed away
Since that sad and mournful day.
A precious one from us has gone,
The voice we loved is stilled.
A place is vacant in our home,
Which never can be filled.
Sadly missed by
WIFE AND CHILDREN.

ROCKWELL, WILLIAM BERT—In memory of my dear husband, who departed this life June 29, 1936.
The rolling stream of life rolls on
But still the vacant chair
Of the one who once sat there.
Sadly missed by
WIFE AND FAMILY.

SIMMS, LEO L.—In loving memory of dear son, passed away June 28, 1932;
There is a link that death cannot sever;
Love and remembrance last forever.
Sadly missed by
MOTHER AND BROTHER.

THUMSER, KATIE—In loving memory of my dear mother who passed away June 26, 1936.
Sadly missed by daughter,
CLARA MERKLE.

Elizabeth Hoff Is Bride of E. F. Goltra Jr.

Bishop Scarlett Performs Ceremony at Home of Bride in Springfield, Ill.—St. Louisans Attend Wedding.

MISS ELIZABETH HOFF, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alonzo Hoff of Springfield, Ill., and E. Field Goltra Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. Goltra, 4487 Lindell boulevard, were married at 4:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon. They stood in the living room of the Hoff home, 1600 Illini road, while the service was read by Bishop William Scarlett of Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, in the presence of a few more than 100 guests, many of them friends of the bridegroom's family who motored to Springfield from here. An informal reception in the garden followed.

White candles in silver candelabra stood on the mantel ledge at either side of antique Dresden vases filled with lilies, snapdragon and baby's breath, and on the floor, at each side of the fireplace, were baskets of white blossoms.

To organ music, the bride, who was unattended, descended the stairway with her father and was joined at the improvised altar by Mr. Goltra and his brother, William Brown Goltra of Chicago, who was best man. During the ceremony the bride's five-year-old niece, Louise Hoff, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Hoff, held her bouquet.

The bride wore a frock of white organza, made with a finely tucked bodice, short puffed sleeves and a long, full skirt, and a circular finger-tip length veil from a bandeau of fresh gardenias. She carried a colonial bouquet of gardenias fringed with lilies of the valley. Her niece was in peach colored handkerchief linen with an English thread lace collar and wore flowers in her hair.

Mrs. Hoff received her guests in a printed periwinkle blue chiffon and Mrs. Goltra's gown was of white lace. Both wore gardenias.

Friends of Mrs. Hoff were invited to cut the wedding cake, which was arranged on an out-of-door reception table garlanded with smilax caught with clusters of white sweet peas.

After the reception Mr. and Mrs. Goltra left for a brief wedding trip. They will spend the summer with his parents at their cottage in Fish Creek, Wis., and will live in St. Louis.

Guests who attended from St. Louis included Mr. and Mrs. Claude S. Kennerly, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Skinker Maffitt, Mrs. George M. von Schrader, Mr. and Mrs. Dana von Schrader, Dr. and Mrs. Willard Bartlett, Robert Dana, Mr. and Mrs. Alden Brown, Dr. and Mrs. Lawrence Post and Guido Pantaleoni. Mrs. William Brown Goltra accompanied her husband to Springfield, and Mrs. Norvell Busey, a cousin of the Goltras, attended from New York.

The bride is a graduate of Miss Hall's School, Pittsfield, Mass., and her husband a graduate of Princeton University, where he was a member of the Cottage Club. He is related to several families of prominence, both in St. Louis and in Jacksonville, Ill. Mrs. J. Dwight Dana, 54 Kingsbury place, is his aunt.

St. Louisans to Spend Summer at La Jolla

LA JOLLA, Cal., June 26.

THE St. Louis Colony at La Jolla, which has been growing steadily for the past several years, will reach its peak this summer. Cottages by the dozen have been leased, and hotels are already becoming crowded.

La Jolla Beach Club has undergone extensive alterations. It has now become almost a small village in itself, with branches of practically every La Jolla shop within the building. A new ballroom has been added, with an orchestra pit above and a bar on the dance floor. New locker rooms have also been installed, but the most interesting addition is the new Marine dining room at the south end of the beach.

Mr. and Mrs. Trustin B. Boyd II were among the first St. Louisans to reach La Jolla. They arrived about 10 days ago, and until they can take possession of their summer cottage on Hillside Drive, overlooking the Beach Club, are staying at the La Jolla Manor.

Miss Adele Hayes was welcomed back to La Jolla Monday, and has taken an attractive summer cottage with a small guest house on Park Row.

Mrs. Bernard G. Farrar, accompanied by her son, Dearborn Farrar, and her two grandsons, Joseph Desloge Jr., and Bernard Desloge, sailed Friday on the Malolo for Honolulu, to spend three weeks

Miss Alice Brokaw Becomes Bride of Lewis Albert Lamb

MISS ALICE GLEESON BROKAW, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Linn Roberts Brokaw, became the bride of Lewis Albert Lamb of Detroit, Mich., yesterday morning. The ceremony took place at St. Rose's Church, at 10:30 o'clock, with the Rev. Mark Ebner of the St. Louis Cathedral, officiating. Mr. Lamb is the son of Mrs. Louis Albert Lamb of Chicago, and the late Mr. Lamb.

The bridal party stood before an altar adorned with vases of lilies and white larkspur and lighted by white tapers. Miss Marion Roberts Brokaw was her sister's only attendant and George Dumont Chopin, a cousin of the bride, was best man. Earvin A. Pickel Jr., another cousin of the bride, and Nevill Montgomery Clarke, fiance of Miss Marion Brokaw, were ushers.

The bride was given in marriage by her uncle, David Cartan Gleeson. She wore a summery garden frock of pale yellow hand drawn organza, made simply with a deep V neckline and short sleeves. A girdle of French bluee velvet defined the high waistline, and the long full skirt, ending in two connected ruffles, touched the floor. She wore a large leghorn hat wreathed with small blue and yellow flowers, and carried a bouquet of yellow daisies and blue delphiniums. The maid of honor was in a costume of beige gray chiffon over matching taffeta fashioned with a V neckline and short sleeves. The long skirt ended in a graceful flare. A contrasting color note was achieved by bands of yellow chiffon at the top of the bodice and at the hem of the underdress. Her hat was a large model of gray straw banded with yellow chiffon. She carried a bouquet of yellow daisies.

The marriage ceremony was followed by a small wedding breakfast for the families and close friends at the home of the bride's uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Paul Gleeson, 415 Wesley avenue, Ferguson. The receiving party stood in the living room before the mantel which was banked with white early summer blossoms and greenery. The reception table was centered by the wedding cake, and rings of white daisies and smilax outlined the candelabra filled with lighted white tapers.

In addition to the bridegroom's mother and his sister, Mrs. James O'Kane of Chicago, out of town guests at the wedding included Mrs. Robert McCormick, Wichita, Kan., a cousin of the bride; Mr. and Mrs. Donald Cameron Smith and Miss Anne Boever of Chicago, and Mr. and Mrs. Schuyler French of Macon, Mo.

Susan Flint and Lieut. L. K. White Are Married at Church Ceremony

STANDING before three large arches of greenery on the pulpit platform of Kingshighway Presbyterian Church, Miss Susan Jane Flint became the bride of Lieut. Lawrence K. White, U. S. A., at 8:30 o'clock last night. The service was read by candlelight by the Rev. Dr. Arnold H. Lowe in the presence of several hundred guests. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Justin T. Flint, 15 Beverly place, and Lieut. White is the son of the Rev. and Mrs. Raymond E. White of Troy, Tenn.

Members of the bridal party preceded the bride down the right aisle, lighted by candelabra and grouped themselves by the two side arches. The chancel, banked in palms and ferns, formed a background for the large standards of white larkspur and Easter lilies between the arches. Lighted candelabra shone through the three ovals outlined in the greenery.

Mr. Flint gave his daughter in marriage. Her gown of white lace over satin was made on simple lines with a square neck outlined in beaded tulle, more of which banded the long, tight-fitting sleeves at the wrist. A modesty veil fell over the full length one which was secured by a band across the top of her head. She carried lilies of the valley.

The six bridesmaids—Mrs. George F. Stevens Jr., Mrs. James L. Ledbetter of Chicago; Mrs. Oren Eugene Hurlbut, Fort Benning, Ga.; Miss Marian Fink, New York; Mrs. C. Donald Close, Lakin, Kan., and Mrs. George Wood Beeler, Fort Belvoir, Va., were in turquoise net over matching taffeta. The square necklines were edged in ruching and the short puffed sleeves were finished in turquoise velvet ribbon which was repeated in the sashes. The long skirts ended in two ruffles which continued into a small train. They carried yellow daisies and wore more of the blossoms in their hair.

Mrs. G. Torrance Flint, matron of honor for her sister-in-law, had a similar dress of orchid net and her flowers were yellow daisies and orchid larkspur. The maid of honor, Miss Judith Harris, was in yellow net and her flowers were also larkspur and daisies. Each wore a yellow band in her hair.

Lieut. Hurlbut was best man and the groomsmen were: Lieut. Louis W. Truman, Fort Benning, Ga.; Lieut. John J. Neiger Jr., Lieut. Charles Kantzler and Lieut. Charles N. Jackmann, Jefferson Barracks; Kenneth Stover, G. Torrance Flint and John J. Green.

Mrs. Flint chose apricot chiffon and lace with a corsage of orchids for her costume. Because of illness, the Rev. and Mrs. White were unable to be present.

At the close of the service the bride and bridegroom led their attendants from the pulpit through the left side aisle, also lighted by candelabra. A reception followed at the Flint home for the bridal party, relatives and a few close friends. The line formed before the mantel place in the living room, which was banked with greenery and ornamented by white blossoms.

Watch and Ward Plans Party for John Scott

THE Watch and Ward Society, inactive for several months, will welcome John Scott, its cofounder and erstwhile planner of ingenious parties, to St. Louis Tuesday night. Mr. Scott has been living in New York for several months and will be here on his vacation.

Invitations to the celebration, a tropical costume party at Bridgehead Inn, on Highway 66, have been decorated by David Wells, the Watch and Ward's official artist. Across the top natives of the African jungles await the arrival of an automobile full of merrymakers to the amazement of wild animals peering over a banner labeled "Great Scott!" At the lower left a melancholy victom of a shipwreck mopes under a palm tree on his small island while mermaids swim about him, and at the right a high-crowned Sultan receives the admiration of his feminine subjects.

Guests are expected to arrive on time, 6:29¾ p. m., bringing a dime store gift for the guest of honor. Dinner is to be at 7:01⅛, and responses to R. S. V. P. are to be sent to two members, the girls' to Miss Adelaide Mahaffey and the boys' to Dan Schlafly. Skits, the titles to be kept secret, are in rehearsal.

Jane Miller Is Married to E. Neil Gray

CRISP summer frocks of the bridesmaids and yellow and white late June blossoms characterized the wedding yesterday of Miss Jane Clyde Miller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Laurence Flandreau Miller, and E. Neil Gray, formerly of London. The garden of the Miller home, 4448 Maryland avenue, was inclosed in a white marquee with removable sides for the sunset ceremony at 6 o'clock, performed by the Rev. Charles Helmsing of the St. Louis Cathedral, and for the reception afterward. The bridegroom is the son of Mrs. George Alfred Gray of Henley-on-the-Thames, near London.

The south end of the marquee, built to accommodate only relatives and a few close friends, was banked high with green bay trees, woodwardia fern and palms to provide a background for an arch of flowers. Clusters of white and yellow gladioli and white asters were arranged in a large fan the entire length of the altar, where white tapers flickered.

Preceded by her attendants, the bride, escorted by her father, passed down a long white aisle, on either side of which were beds in which yellow and white flowers bloomed. After the service the bridal pair knelt on white satin prie Dieux for the blessing.

A gown of sheer white organza combined with fragile butterfly lace was chosen for the bride, whose veil fell from a half circle of orange blossoms over a lace train set in at the hip line. A face veil fell low over her bouquet, composed of individual gladiola blossoms. A narrow lace band defined the extremely high waistline of the bodice, into which were set elbow length sleeves, full at the top.

Miss Mary Alice Collins was maid of honor, and Miss Sally Gruner, Miss Barbara Brodhead, Miss Harriet Edwards and Miss Beth Sanford were bridesmaids. They all wore organza frocks, Miss Collins in pale yellow trimmed with green velvet ribbon, and the bridesmaids in the same colors reversed. Their gowns, made over white taffeta, were designed alike with puffed sleeves caught at the top by small loops of the ribbon extending to loops at the V-necks of the bodices and into streamers at the hems of their long, full skirts. Instead of bouquets the bridesmaids carried inverted white garden hats, filled with daisies and held by long velvet ribbons.

Sidney Kieselhorst was best man for Mr. Gray, and groomsmen were J. Boyd Ware, George L. Dyer Jr., Thomas S. Chopin, Donald Faegin, Tulsa, Ok., and Charles Peters of Houston, Tex., formerly of London, and Edward Clyde Miller, a brother of the bride.

A profusion of flowers decorated the rooms of the lower floor of the Miller home. The bridal table arranged in a U to seat about 30 guests was centered by a wedding cake banked with white flowers that extended down the table to two trees, more than three feet tall, of white gladioli blooms. White candles in candelabra illuminated the table.

Out-of-town guests here for the wedding included: Mr. and Mrs. Jefferson B. Robertson, Toledo, O.; Mr. and Mrs. George R. Ford, Perrysburg, O.; Mr. and Mrs. John Edward Clyde, Chester, Pa.; and Mr. and Mrs. G. Chesebrough, Fredericksburg, Va., uncles and aunts of the bride; Miss Jane Faegin, Tulsa, and Mr. and Mrs. Farmin Carswell, Kansas City.

Mr. Gray and his bride will spend their honeymoon traveling in England after which they will go to London for five months while Mr. Gray is temporarily attached to the London office of his company. Afterward they will live in New York, where Mr. Gray has been transferred.

WASHINGTON SCENE

WASHINGTON, June 26.

HIGHLIGHTS of masculine sartorial achievements: President Roosevelt, looking cool in white suit with soft shirt and casually knotted tie. Attorney-General Homer Cummings, whose wife is in Europe, in immaculate white entertaining the ladies and gentlemen of the press at his home last Sunday. Senator Joe Robinson, also all in white, with a striped tie adding a touch of color to his bland countenance.

At the tax hearings more sartorial effects were noted among the members of the Senate and House Committees who sat in a semi-circle on a platform. Senator Pat Harrison lounged in his seat in a white suit, white shirt and gay tie. Senator La Follette wore brown mohair, with a soft cream shirt, brown tie, brown shoes and cream socks and with a cream-colored handkerchief in his pocket. Senator Walsh also wore dark clothes, but Representative Vinson was in summer attire. Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Magill wore a dark gray mohair suit, with a blue shirt and a gray tie.

The death in China last week of the widow of Dr. Wu Ting-Fang, first Chinese Minister to the United States, recalled her stay in Washington. Mme. Wu was 91.

Dr. Wu Ting-Fang, educated in England and acquainted with Occidental ways, had an abiding passion to acquire more information in that regard. He thought the best way to do it was to ask questions, and he went about the United States a human question mark.

The children of Dr. and Mrs. Wu Ting-Fang went to the Washington public schools and it was a proud moment for the Chinese Minister and his wife when they had seats of honor at a Central High cadet drill to see their son march past at the head of hi scompany. This son followed his father as Chinese Minister to the United States.

That was the day of princess dresses, tight-fitting and with concealed closing under many yards of soutache braid embroidery.

"How did you get into that dress?" Dr. Wu once inquired, right in the middle of a discussion on some educational movement. Then he listened with great intentness while the intricacies of the garment were explained to him.

Mme. Wu was noted for her many charities. In recent years she had financed the Chinese Charity Hospital in Hongkong. She was a Christian.

From Honolulu come letters dwelling with enthusiasm on the fairy-like house Mr. and Mrs. James Cromwell—the latter the former Doris Duke—are building there.

A neighbor hostess to Mrs. Cromwell will be Mrs. Walter Dillingham, whom Washington knows best as Louise Gaylord of Chicago. The Dillingham home is in the Italian style with white the high note, carried out in flowers, lilies, stocks, gladioli and gardenias.

WASHINGTON SCENE

By the POE SISTERS

WASHINGTON, June 26.

HIGHLIGHTS of masculine sartorial achievements: President Roosevelt, looking cool in white suit with soft shirt and casually knotted tie. Attorney-General Homer Cummings, whose wife is in Europe, in immaculate white entertaining the ladies and gentlemen of the press at his home last Sunday. Senator Joe Robinson, also all in white, with a striped tie adding a touch of color to his bland countenance.

At the tax hearings more sartorial effects were noted among the members of the Senate and House Committees who sat in a semi-circle on a platform. Senator Pat Harrison lounged in his seat in a white suit, white shirt and gay tie. Senator La Follette wore brown mohair, with a soft cream shirt, brown tie, brown shoes and cream socks and with a cream-colored handkerchief in his pocket. Senator Walsh also wore dark clothes, but Representative Vinson was in summer attire. Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Magill wore a dark gray mohair suit, with a blue shirt and a gray tie.

The death in China last week of the widow of Dr. Wu Ting-Fang, first Chinese Minister to the United States, recalled her stay in Washington. Mme. Wu was 91.

Dr. Wu Ting-Fang, educated in England and acquainted with Occidental ways, had an abiding passion to acquire more information in that regard. He thought the best way to do it was to ask questions, and he went about the United States a human question mark.

The children of Dr. and Mrs. Wu Ting-Fang went to the Washington public schools and it was a proud moment for the Chinese Minister and his wife when they had seats of honor at a Central High cadet drill to see their son march past at the head of hi scompany. This son followed his father as Chinese Minister to the United States.

That was the day of princess dresses, tight-fitting and with concealed closing under many yards of soutache braid embroidery.

"How did you get into that dress?" Dr. Wu once inquired, right in the middle of a discussion on some educational movement. Then he listened with great intentness while the intricacies of the garment were explained to him.

Mme. Wu was noted for her many charities. In recent years she had financed the Chinese Charity Hospital in Hongkong. She was a Christian.

From Honolulu come letters dwelling with enthusiasm on the fairy-like house Mr. and Mrs. James Cromwell—the latter the former Doris Duke—are building there.

A neighbor hostess to Mrs. Cromwell will be Mrs. Walter Dillingham, whom Washington knows best as Louise Gaylord of Chicago. The Dillingham home is in the Italian style with white the high note, carried out in flowers, lilies, stocks, gladioli and gardenias.

BOY SCOUT BARBECUE AT CAMP IRONDALE

Carnival Saturday Will Close First Session—164 From St. Louis Attend.

Boy Scouts at Camp Irondals, operated by the St. Louis Council, have had greater freedom of action in determining their program of work this year. Troop leaders have been mapping out events for the scouts under them instead of having it done by the camp staff as in the past. Exceptions are swimming, handicrafts, athletic events, and scout test passing, which are still handled in the old way.

There are 164 St. Louis scouts in the camp.

Many of the boys attending this first session which will end Saturday are anticipating a barbecue and carnical to be presented on that night. The carnival will be called "Grosse's Gayeties" in honor of A. C. Grosse, scoutmaster of Webster Groves Troop 305, encamped for the first time at Irondale.

Entertainment during the past week included a talk about snakes by Marlin Perkins, curator or reptiles of the St. Louis Zoo. H. M. Kennon, curator of birds, will give a similar talk this week.

At Lion's Den Camp.

The policy of individual leadership was even more in evidence at Lion's Den Camp, Seckman, Mo., during the past week. Forty scouts of troops, 58, 118, and 206 returned to St. Louis last night after having spent the opening week of the season there. For a majority of the boys, it was their first experience at camping and each one was free to follow a camp program formulated by troop leaders.

The only requirements that had to be met were sick call and the daily rest period, although trained leaders were available for advanced instruction for those who wanted it. A resume of camp activities for the week shows that optional projects undertaken Tuesday and Thursday included nature hikes, track meets and other athletic events. Monday, Wednesday, and Friday were swim days.

The St. Louis Council will operate Lion's Den throughout the summer to provide camping activities for those boys unable to attend the longer sessions at Irondale.

Going to Washington.

Scouts of the sea scout ship "St. Louisan," last contingent of St. Louis scouts to attend the National Scout Jamboree opening Wednesday at Washington, will leave St. Louis tomorrow morning. Two X-boats and two smaller boats will be taken for participation in races to be held at the jamboree. Noel Chadwick is in charge.

Members of four troops entrained for Washington Saturday and one of them later will sail from Boston for the world jamboree next month. at Vogelgezang, Netherlands.

Other scouts from the West and Southwest en route to the national encampment were in St. Louis for a short time last week. They included 30 Mexican scouts representing the Mexican Republic, 70 youths from Corpus Christi, Tex., and 30 from Medford, Ore.

Troop Notes.

Troop 185, Rock Springs School, is meeting at intervals this summer to work on electric pencil craft, its subject for the next merit badge show.

Courts of honor were held by the following troops last week: Troop 246, B'Nai Amoona Temple; Troop 31, Grace M. E. Church, and Troop 304, Webster Groves.

An outing last week at Gerald, Mo., sponsored by Troop 229, Riverview Gardens, was the first lone troop camp held in the St. Louis area this season. Others planning such individual camps some time this summer include Troop 89, St. Roch's Church; Troop 163, Curby Memorial Church; Troop 86, Horace Mann School, and troops 158 and 232.

Lindenwood Girls Going Abroad.

A party of 14 girls, students at Lindenwood College, former students and others, will sail Tuesday from New York on the Statendam for a two months' tour of Europe. In the group will be Miss Martha Anderson, Texarkana, Tex.; Miss Helen Schelosky, Evansville, Ind.; and Miss Virginia Skerry, Ottawa, Ill., upperclassmen at the college; Miss Ella Margaret Williams, Edwardsville, Ill., an alumna of Lindenwood; Miss Jacqueline Ward, Artesia, N. M.; Miss Rosine Saxe, now teaching at the University of Missouri; Miss Frances Pedler of Ogden, Utah., and Miss Jean Campbell of Norfolk, Neb., all former students at the college. Others making the trip will be Miss Katherine Smeed, Miss Helen Schneider and Miss Gertrude Erb of Detroit; Miss Lillian Venem of Minneapolis, Miss Phyllis Taylor of Ogden, Utah, and Miss Mary Bell Smith of Fresno, Cal. In charge of the group is Miss Margaret Mantle Stookey, director of physical education at Lindenwood.

Y. W. C. A. Girls' League.

The Y. W. C. A. Business Girls' League will hold a cabinet meeting at central building, 1411 Locust street, Tuesday at 6:30 p. m. The following recently elected officers for the year, as well as chairmen of the league's standing committees, will attend: Miss Marie Gegan, Miss Ethel Thomas, Miss La Verta Schwendker, Miss Ethel Aman, Miss Lucille Aude, Miss Mae Davis, and Miss Henrietta Zimmerman. Plans for next year's program and for a boat excursion July 17, will be discussed.

MORE than anything else responsible for that New York is sheer heaven to see once couldn't be hired to live there, and so o founded suspicion that the screaming and roa plunge themselves when on the town is a con In saner communities business is not accomplis mist that envelops every sort of professional action in Babylon-on-the-Make, and the outlan of his wits at the spectacle of people achievin atmosphere which in his mind is associated whoopdeedo. To the Manhattanite who is going places and getting the business of living done to its maximum capacity this, of course, is the most compelling fascination of the urban scene, but the urgency, the selective evolution and comparative efficiency of existence here terrify the leisurely fellow from other locales, where, metaphorically speaking, the breadfruit grows more abundantly and prestige can be established by less spacious gestures.

This department encountered at a cocktail shebang the other afternoon a highly successful young barrister from Boston, who, in his home town, is considered a very sufficient fellow. He watched the scene, which was populated entirely with celebrities and professional folk going about their daily business of contacts, flattery, social intrigue, character scuttling and generally getting somewhere and then ingenuously commented:

"But all these people seem to want something from each other!"

Of course, they want something from each other, which is the whole secret of life in New York, and their lives are predicated on the business of getting the particular something each one wants. That's why the professional, social and business successes of New Yorkers are the ranking successes of the world, and it's also why the city's Latinate motto might very well be changed to "Nut'in' for "Nut'in'."

THE gastronomes' delight, the Madison Roof, is open again, after two seasons in abeyance, and furnishes, as of old, a dinner resort unique in the town in that it is just about the only really, truly roof, right open to the sky and al fresco as anything, and also a place for actual eating, unharassed by floor shows and ragtime music. Its seating capacity is very limited and the management encourages only a rather dressy, extremely expensive clientele, which arrives late and dines later and in circumstances of grande lux.

Paul Moreau, the Madison's chef, has been there since the regime of Theodore (of the Ritz) Titze, and is professionally known as one of the most distinguished cordon bleus in the land, an intimate of Scotto, Donon and the other topnotchers of his craft. The Madison's cellarman, Auguste, who is well known to trans-Atlantic commuters on the Paris, is a discerning enthusiast without the fancy airs affected by less knowing wine stewards, and you can drink right well under his advice.

Opening night found such fastidious folk as Lois Long, the town's ranking restaurant reporter; Kenneth Murchison and Tony Sarg on the premises, making havoc of the cold buffet and descending, Assyrian-like, on the breast of chicken Eugenie, the salmon aspic and such. A bang-up place for serious and affluent diners.

LIBBY HOLMAN has her troubles and, as one of the spook actors asserted in "Four Saints and Three Acts," this is a fact. No celebrity extant suffers so much from phonies, moochers and spurious anonymities who attach themselves to her train as the husky-voiced torch singer who has just returned from an appearance in London, which returned voyagers to the coronation describe as a raving success.

Part of Miss Holman's susceptibility to characters who are about as authentic currency as Confederate shinplasters is the circumstance that she is so near-sighted that half the time she doesn't know who is seated at her table. A contributing factor also is that she is as generous with her personality as the day is long and is imposed on by every ringer who can manage to insinuate himself into the photographic scene with her.

Outlanders Frightened By New Yorkers Mixing Business and Pleasure

A Fine Scotch Mist Envelops Every Sort of Transaction in Modern Babylon-on-the-Make.

By Lucius Beebe

NEW YORK, June 26.

MORE than anything else responsible for the visitor's attitude that New York is sheer heaven to see once a year, but that they couldn't be hired to live there, and so on, is a perfectly well founded suspicion that the screaming and roaring into which they plunge themselves when on the town is a constant state of affairs. In saner communities business is not accomplished in the fine Scotch mist that envelops every sort of professional or commercial transaction in Babylon-on-the-Make, and the outlander is frightened out of his wits at the spectacle of people achieving their affairs in an atmosphere which in his mind is associated only with extravagant whoopdeedo. Save in Hollywood, professional careers aren't achieved elsewhere in a prevailing midst of night clubs, gin palaces and crazy lux. Business is business and fun is fun, but to shake the two up together with just a dash of absinthe tends to unhinge the minds of out-of-towners.

To the Manhattanite who is going places and getting the business of living done to its maximum capacity this, of course, is the most compelling fascination of the urban scene, but the urgency, the selective evolution and comparative efficiency of existence here terrify the leisurely fellow from other locales, where, metaphorically speaking, the breadfruit grows more abundantly and prestige can be established by less spacious gestures.

A contributing factor also is that she is as generous with her personality as the day is long and is imposed on by every ringer who can manage to insinuate himself into the photographic scene with her.

She recently encountered a near-celebrity, who asked her to dance in a London night club, and in no time the paragraphers had established a romance of Tristan-Isolde proportions. The fact was that she had never seen him before or since the brief moment when a photographer's flash exploded, and then didn't know his name. Libby is not precisely the naive type, but when it comes to publicity seekers at her expense she definitely is in the victim classification.

GOTHAM VIGNETTES: Robert Bridges, august and patrician editor of "Scribner's," stalking down Fifty-fourth street from the University Club to the Ziegfeld Theater . . . Dean Cornwall, who designed the decorations for the Warwick's very swank Raleigh Room, covertly watching the patrons admire his art from a secluded table . . . Molly Thayer, society scrivener, her neck swathed in coils of a green jade snake, telling Kay Halle all about the coronation at Theodore's during lunch . . . Mrs. Frank Vance Storrs, in a Miss Jessica hat that covers the right side of her head just up to the part, climbing out of her sporty Rolls at Cartier's . . . Skipper Williams, dean of ships news reporters, swapping maritime falsehoods with Staff Captain R. J. Finlow as the Queen Mary docks in the North River . . . Alfred Knopf, in a bright green silk suit, entering a Fifth Avenue camera supply shop for color films for his movie machine, at which he is an expert amateur . . . Louis Sobol, at the bar at "21," explaining to a stunning maiden in a gold lame evening gown that the reason the Duke of Windsor's marital whims are so widely touted is that it makes romance believable in old ladies' homes.

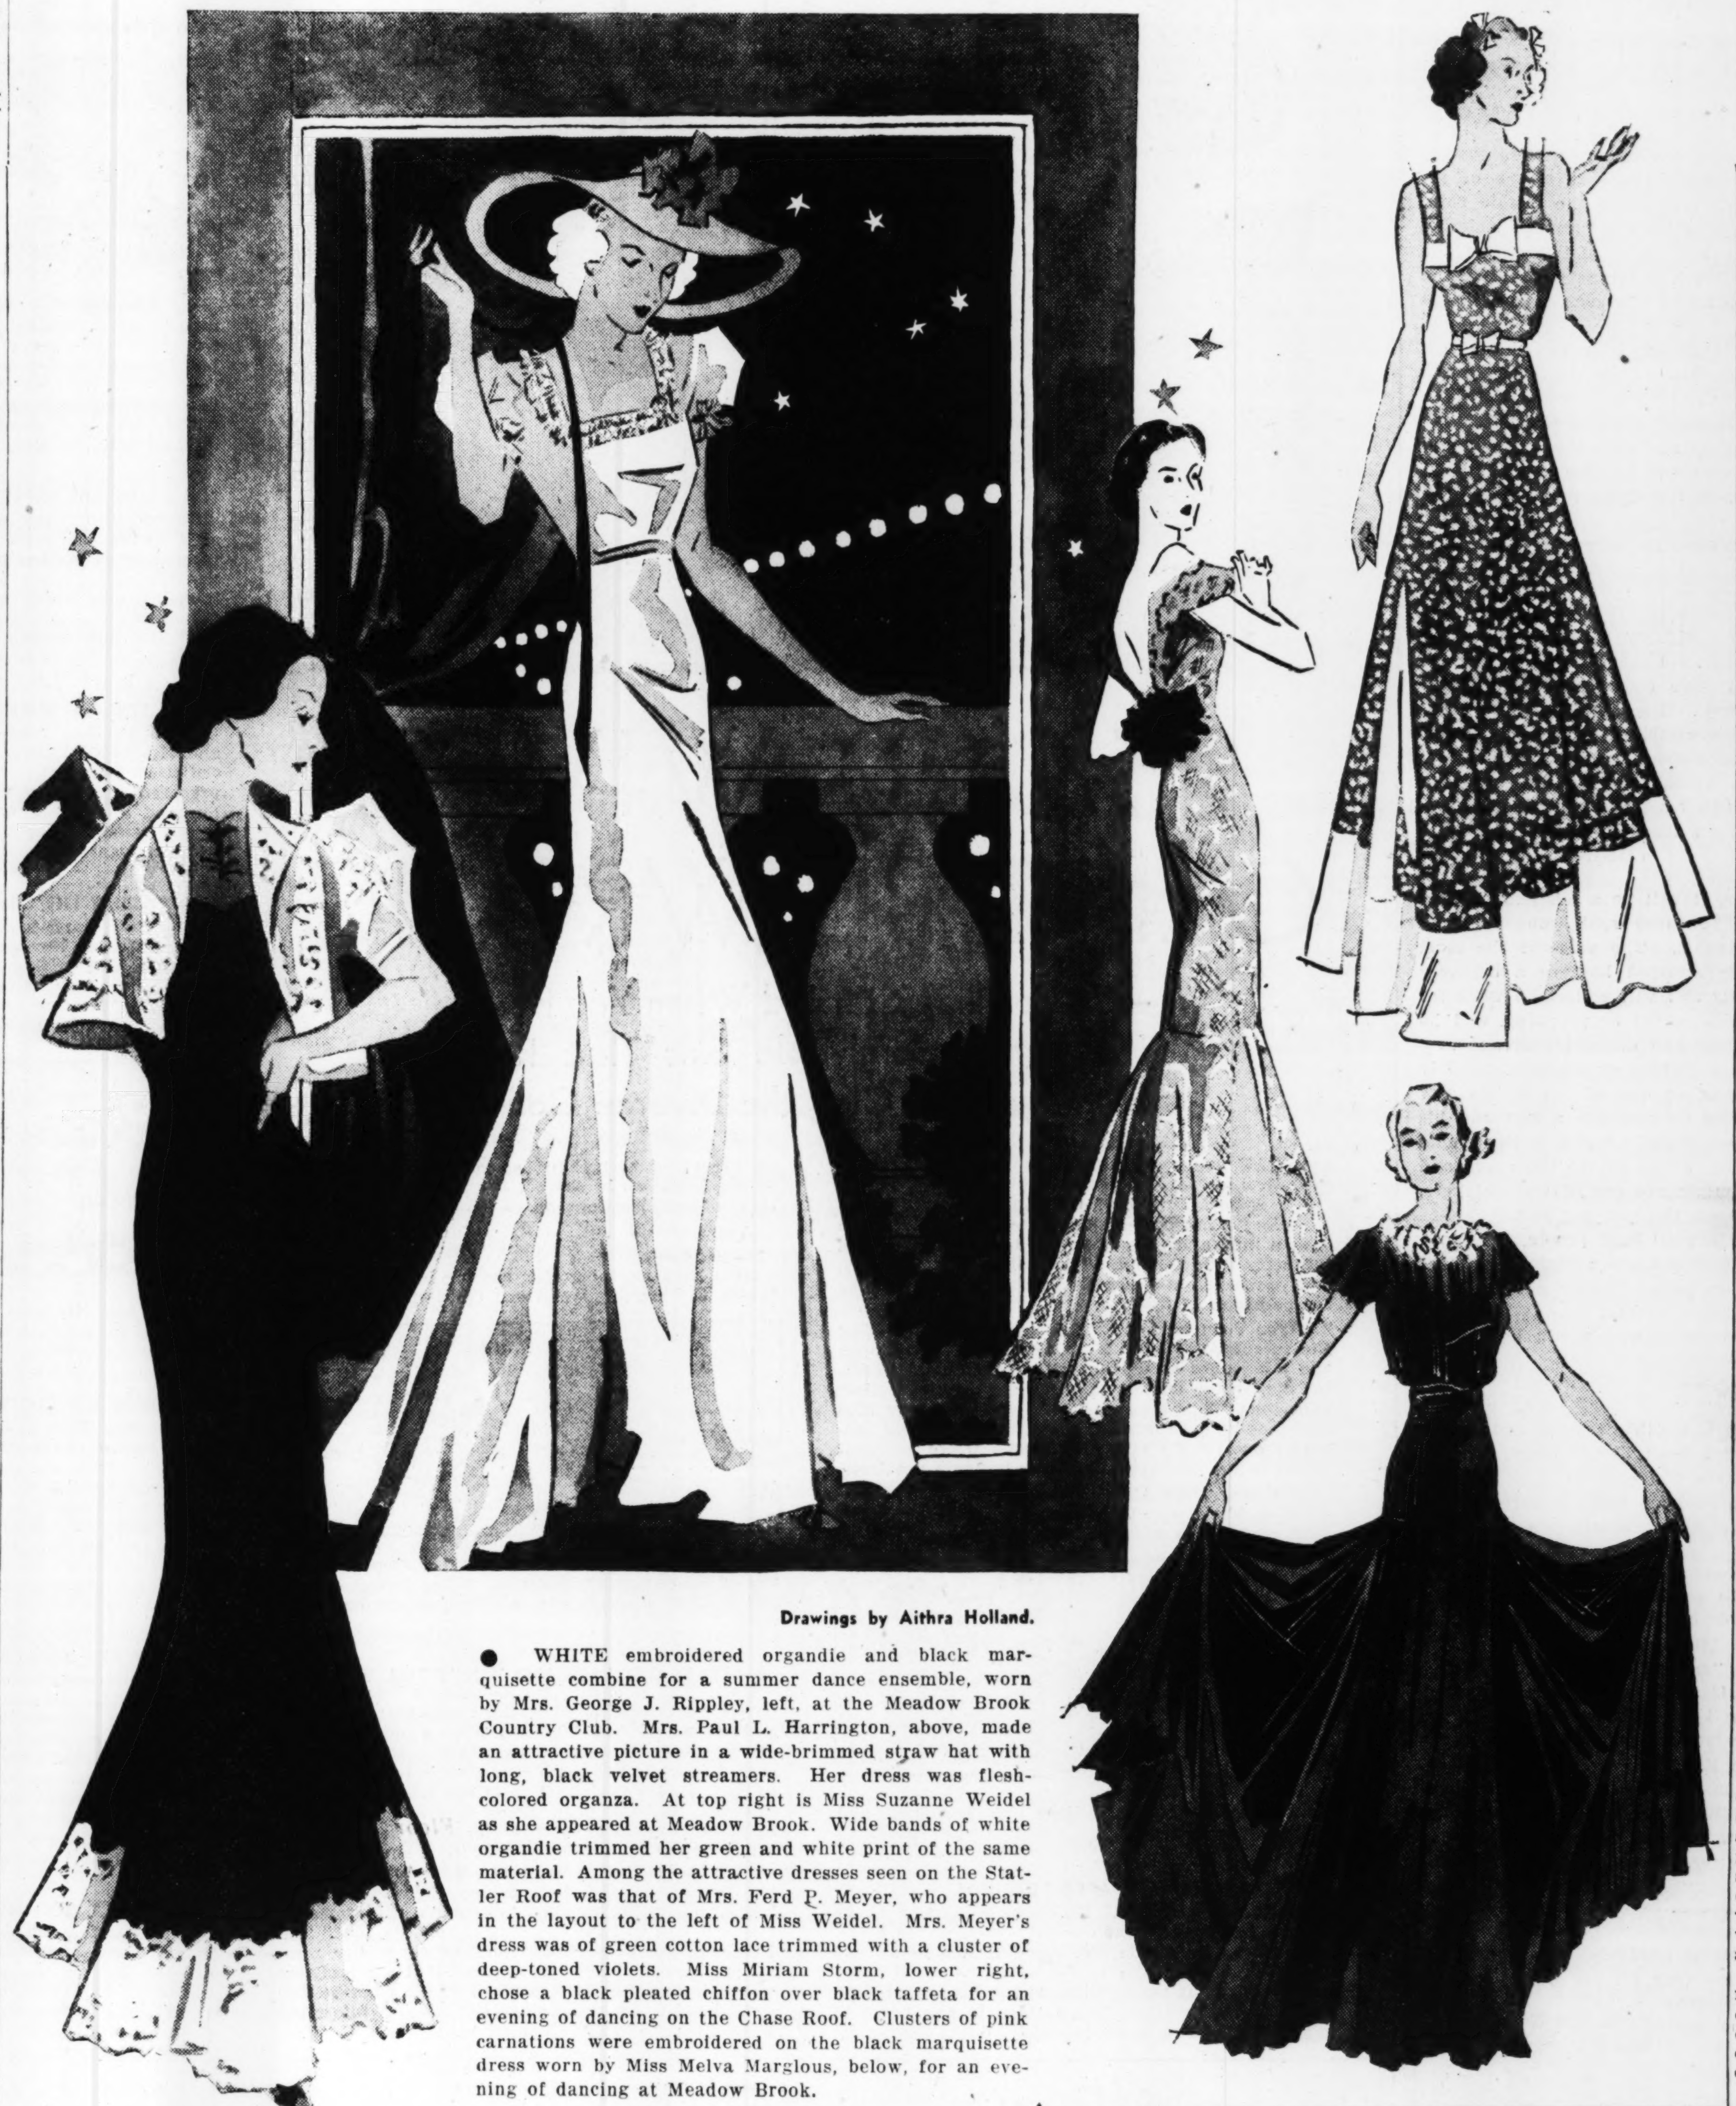
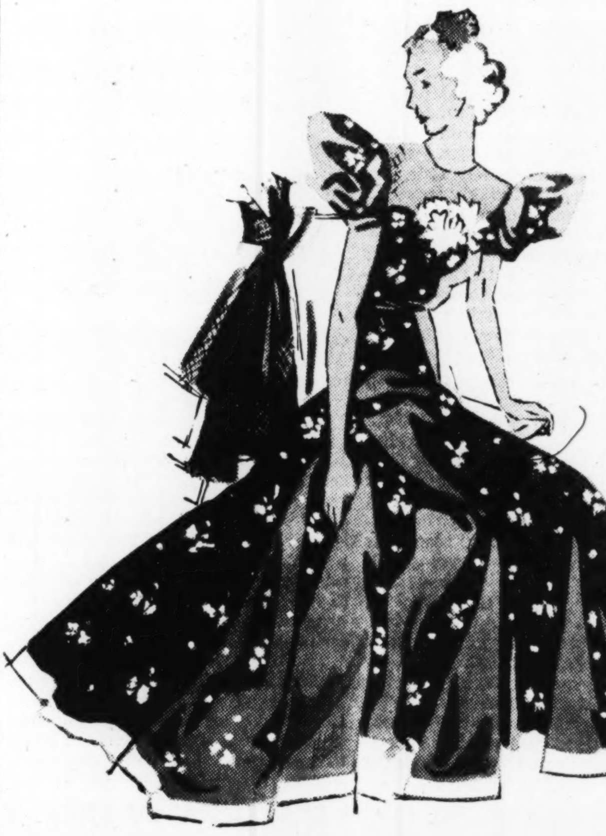
THE NIGHT HAS A THOUSAND EYES

And So St. Louis Women Appear at Roof Gardens and Clubs in Up-To-The-Minute Styles



Drawings by Aithra Holland.

● WHITE embroidered organdie and black marquisette combine for a summer dance ensemble, worn by Mrs. George J. Rippley, left, at the Meadow Brook Country Club. Mrs. Paul L. Harrington, above, made an attractive picture in a wide-brimmed straw hat with long, black velvet streamers. Her dress was flesh-colored organza. At top right is Miss Suzanne Weidel as she appeared at Meadow Brook. Wide bands of white organdie trimmed her green and white print of the same material. Among the attractive dresses seen on the Statler Roof was that of Mrs. Ferd P. Meyer, who appears in the layout to the left of Miss Weidel. Mrs. Meyer's dress was of green cotton lace trimmed with a cluster of deep-toned violets. Miss Miriam Storm, lower right, chose a black pleated chiffon over black taffeta for an evening of dancing on the Chase Roof. Clusters of pink carnations were embroidered on the black marquisette dress worn by Miss Melva Marglous, below, for an evening of dancing at Meadow Brook.



Solving Problem Of the Waistline

THE designer who is undecided as to where a waistline should be has a clever way of solving the problem. The draped silhouette is the solution. Featured extensively in the midseason Paris collections and now shown in St. Louis, this silhouette completely avoids the waistline issue by being draped from shoulder to hips with no sugbestion of a belt.

Two other indications that the designers are undecided about the length to which waistlines may go in the coming season are in the number of skirts which have yokes and the many blouses and jackets which add gathered peplums. The yokes are introduced on tailored skirts, usually those that have blouses of the shirtwaist type. The peplum jackets are unbelted and have their peplums which are gathered very full placed at the hipline.

Little Girl Hair-Do

Pigtails are replacing the long, straggling locks that little girls have been affecting during the last few years. Two braided tails are the rule and each must be held tightly with a huge hair bow. The tails, by the way, are pulled to the front of the shoulders so that the bows supply decorative emphasis.

Shirring Prominent in Style Picture

THE draped bodices and blouses which have distinguished the early summer frocks look very plain in comparison to the later season fashions. Not only are necklines, sleeves and blouse fronts shirred from beginning to end but skirts also are caught up into puffy fullness.

One printed frock of East Indian inspiration in its pattern and color scheme has a sling-like drapery which swings over one shoulder and circles the skirt at the opposite side while another starts its shirring at the center front and back of the neckline and extends it downward to the knees. The skirt is slashed at the front, relieving a cetain amount of "hobble" effect. The latter frock is made of a gray blue satin—a fabric, by the way, which is attaining new honors for late summer wear.

Afternoon dresses that wrap to one side with drapery that is tied or shirred into place are noted with the same theme developed for evening wear. The skirt which pulls all of its fullness to the front with hobble-like drapery also is apparent in the new collections.

The Duchess of Windsor evidently has influenced American dress styles with her interested in modified drapery because there are reproductions of several of her Mainbocher models available now. The daytime frock which has horizontal drapery at the front of the blouse caught with a handsome clip at a high neckline is accepted here as is the model which has a twisted neckline drapery.

Tight Sleeves On Fall Frocks

WHILE the designers are draping blouses, lowering waistlines and straightening out the hemlines of skirts they also are cutting out the fullness of sleeves. Advance autumn fashions which forecast the coming season's mode have sleeves that are as straight and tight as the Duchess of Windsor likes them. Absence of shoulder pleats is especially noteworthy and if any fullness does appear it is in the form of a drapery on the forearm.

Sleek satins are the fabrics which show off the new straight sleeves and slender skirts to best advance so the shiny fabrics are the first to show the changes of fashion. Look for them not only of perennial black but flaunting such colors as bright blue and purple.

The Colossal Ignorance of Average Adult

Furnishes Our Greatest National Menace, Writes Woman Columnist.

By Elsie Robinson

THE youngsters are riled!

Here they come, busting and beaming out of high school and college, chock-full of the latest information and primed for red-hot arguments with Mom and Dad. Only to find that they're far from welcome.

Which, after all, isn't so surprising. Hitherto, the old folks have been riding high and winning all the medals as ultimate authorities, although knowing practically nothing about the status quo of their fellow man. And now along come these infants—and show them up! Naturally, Mom and Dad are feeling plenty peeved.

"High school kids discussing labor laws, sit-down strikes!" roars Dad. "Young squirts, that aren't yet dry behind the ears, trying to explain the Minimum Wage and Social Security Act to me, their own father! Yes—maybe I don't know the last-minute particulars about some of these things. But what of it? Haven't I got enough to do, without trying to run the country?

"Besides, most of these new-fangled ideas are just nonsense, anyway. Nobody ever heard of such goings-on when I was a kid. And sensible folks are wasting their time worrying about 'em now. It's those hot-air artists down at Washington, stirring up trouble. And now it's spread to the schools! A lot of fool teachers putting radical notions into the youngsters' heads; then sending them home to sass their own parents! There oughtta be a law against it! No wonder the country's going to the dogs!"

—o-o—

MOM TAKES IT even harder. Child Labor Laws? Why on earth should she be expected to know about things like that? Hasn't she enough to do, slaving her feet off 14 hours a day, without taking up politics? They're trying to make a fool of her, that's what they are! And is Dad going to sit there and let her be insulted by her own children without raising a hand? That's gratitude for you! That's all the thanks you get for sacrificing the best years of your life!

"Isn't it the limit?" they write. "Sure, we love them, but is that any reason why they've gotta be so dumb? Why, they couldn't answer a quarter of the questions we have in our Current Events Class! And the worst of it is, they're not even ashamed of it. Look how they act when we try to help them snap out of it! You'd think we'd committed a crime. Wouldn't it burn you?

IT WOULD—and does! Just why parents should be granted special permits to be boneheads has always been a mystery to me. Yet, they are. And today, though we are in the midst of the greatest industrial conflict in human history, the average parent has less interest in and knowledge of what's happening in his world than a 14-year-old school boy from England, Germany or France. We equip our homes with every modern mechanical marvel . . . but our brains still sit around in curl papers.

As a matter of fact, our greatest national menace is not the malice of any foreign foe or the violence of any imported radical, but the colossal and complacent ignorance of the average adult American!

You Will See Red When Looking at Newest Footwear

THOSE dark red sandals which are appearing in the shops for summer wear are a forerunner of more red footwear for autumn and winter, according to the fashion authorities who dictate what we shall wear on our feet.

"Acajou" is the word which describes the latest tone in women's shoes, but most of us will be referring to the shade as mahogany. It is a dark reddish brown hue that is rich and striking. Next in importance for early autumn comes cabana, which is a Spanish tan. Red cedar, coffee brown and oak brown are other shades which must be considered if a woman decides to plan a red or brown ensemble.

Scottish clan colors are novel in their application to footwear styles so be prepared to consider clan-green, tartan gold, kiltie red, scone gray and highland blue in the ensembling of a perfect sports wardrobe. Add black suede and marine blue and you'll have the most interesting summary of the advance footwear styles.

The reddish cast which is influencing women's shoe styles also influences hosiery fashions. Women who wear the mahogany and other new tones will be wearing matching hosiery, if the designers have this way.

MY OPINION

by

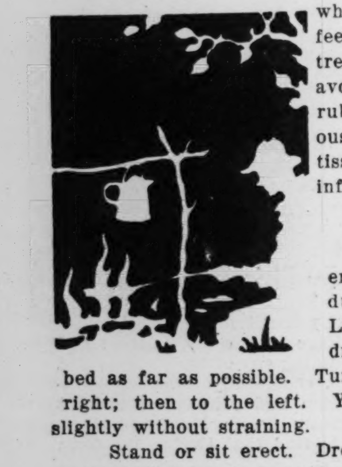
Martha Carr

Dear Mrs. Carr:

WOULD you please tell me where I could find out the best way to avoid a double chin? A friend of mine said she had written you about this, but, unfortunately, did not see the column which had your answer. I am 31 and feel there must be some really beneficial treatment that would aid in helping to avoid the double chin. I have tried the rubber patters; but have heard from various sources that these tend to weaken the tissues. I would really like authoritative information.

Thank you,

ELLEN.



Head and neck exercises are considered by many the best means of reducing or preventing the double chin. Lie on your back across the bed and drop the head back and down off the bed as far as possible. Turn the head as far as possible to the right; then to the left. You must feel the neck muscles pull slightly without straining.

Stand or sit erect. Drop the head slowly to the chest, then raise and drop back as far as possible. Drop the head to the side and then over to the other side. Turn the head to the right and move forward, then backward; then to the left.

Start doing each exercise five times. Feel the muscles pull without straining. Relax the muscles last by dropping the head forward and rotating several times to the right, then to the left. Let it roll perfectly relaxed.

After the exercises slap cold water, gently, around the neck, especially under the chin.

My dear Mrs. Carr:

● I AM AN AMBITIOUS YOUNG FELLOW with high hopes of some day becoming a great singer. I have never taken any lessons. I cannot afford it; but I have been told that I have a good voice and I can read music well. I would like to sing in a Catholic church choir. I believe this would help develop my voice and bring out its full range. I am not asking for a salary; just a chance to show that I can sing, which I love to do more than anything else. Both my parents come from the land of music and opera—Italy. That probably is why I love music so.

COMING BARITONE.

If you hope to make a singer, it will be a mistake to start with choral work of any kind. You may spoil your voice by wrong placement and by overtaxing it. The voice is the most delicate of instruments, and easily strained because a beginner does not know his range thoroughly and will undertake work for which his vocal organs are not constructed or prepared, and he will attempt to over-reach his natural and undeveloped range.

I am sure you will find a good teacher or maestro, possibly connected with the Municipal Opera, or one of the artists now singing there, who would be willing to give you a test and his honest opinion of your vocal possibilities. Write a little note to one of the baritones now singing, or go out to the opera and after the performance ask if you might see one of these singers, or the conductor, who might arrange the test for you.

Do not be discouraged. They are all busy people, we know. But what if they are—all of them had to make a beginning. Just hang on 'til one of them talks to you. You've got to know whether you are on a wild goose chase or not.

There should be vocal teachers here who would be willing, too, to try out your voice and ability.

—o—o—

My dear Mrs. Carr:

● MY PROBLEM IS that I have a terrible temper and disposition. When someone says anything I don't like, I usually make a scene. After it is all over, and I have had time to think and calm down, I really know how silly I have been and am sorry. I feel I am losing many friends because of this. Would you please help me?

MISERABLE.

You are intelligent enough to realize and acknowledge the fault, and that goes far toward helping you to correct it. Possibly you are of an excitable temperament and it is harder for you than for calmer people to "make haste slowly." Children are sometimes told to count ten, if their feelings are perturbed, before they speak. You might well try this. And again if you feel indignant, remember to delay your answer until next day—then you are not likely to make it.

Seriously, I would judge from your letter and the appearance of your writing and style that you are a person too mature and with too good taste, to allow yourself to be crude enough always to give way to your impulses. You can watch this and do your own curbing.

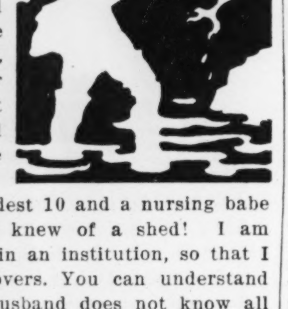
My dear Mrs. Carr:

● AFTER GOING THROUGH extreme hardships last winter—just barely existing—my husband became very ill. It was a battle to save his life and now, after two months in the hospital, they are still in the dark as to what is causing his illness.



I had to appeal for relief, but since we had lived only six months in the city, I was told I must move back to the county in order to be eligible. And, until I began hunting a place to live, that seemed simple enough. Upon telling that the rent would be paid with relief orders, there was just one I could get. After two weeks, the landlady advises me to get another place as she does not understand the red tape involved in making out these rent orders.

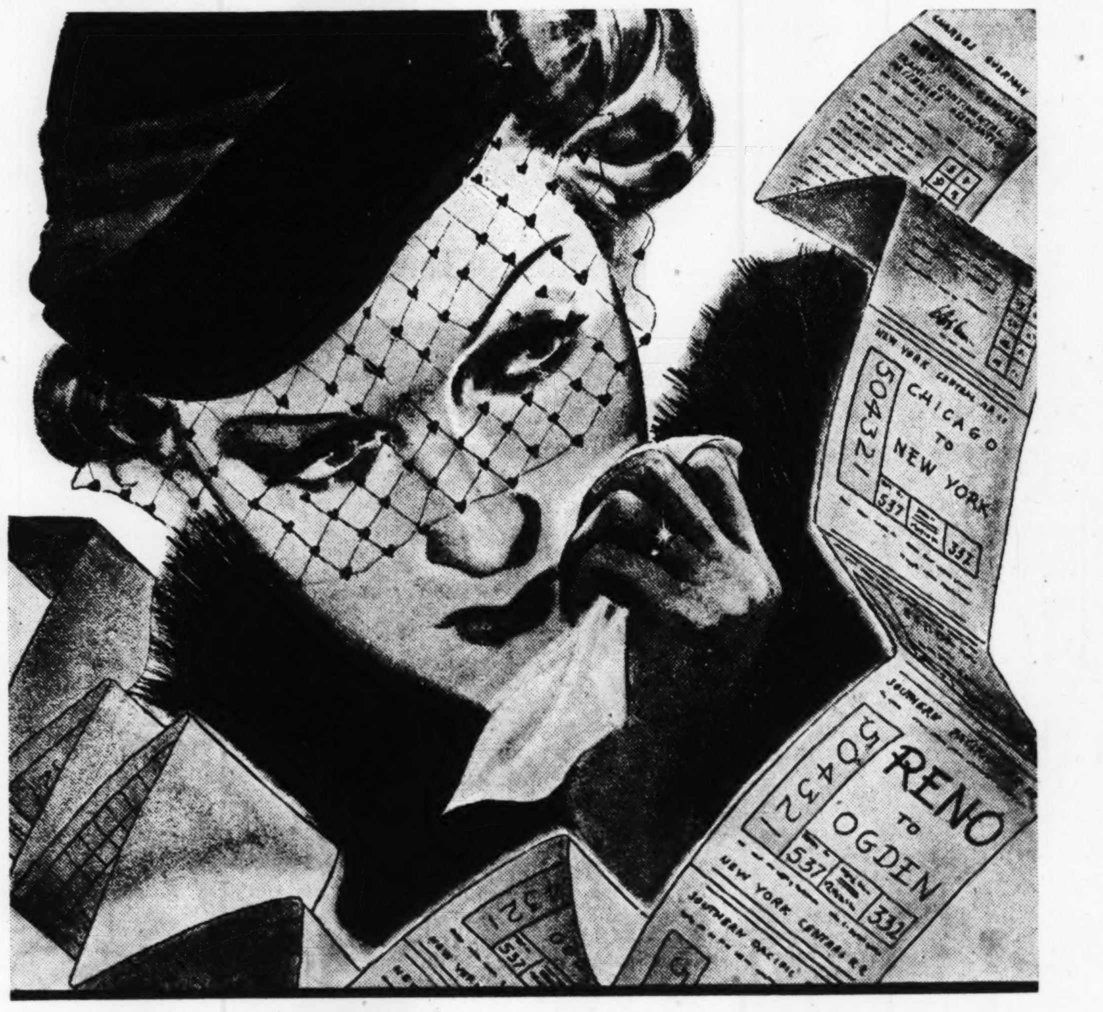
Mrs. Carr, with five children (the oldest 10 and a nursing babe of 14 weeks) it is terrible. If I only knew of a shed! I am afraid I shall have to place the children in an institution, so that I might find work until my husband recovers. You can understand what the thought of this means. My husband does not know all this, his own battle is hard enough. And this is my first public appeal. Of course, I can give verification of my plight.

Sincerely, C. E. M.

The triple difficulty of finding a place, a job and looking after your children, with the added trouble of your husband's illness, would, it seems to me, make the idea of placing your children, temporarily, where you know their health and comfort will be supervised wisely, a comfort and a haven. Just what provision can be made for them, it would be best for you to ask personally, of the Board of Children's Guardians, the Children's Aid Society or Community Council Child Welfare.

If you find that, being a resident of the county, you must first look to the county for help, the County Juvenile Court may have valuable suggestions for your temporary help with the children and for the shelter and employment you need. With a 14 weeks' old baby, however, home work of some kind probably would be all you could do.

THE WORLD AS WOMEN SEE IT



25,000 WIVES CAN'T BE WRONG

—So You'll Be Startled When You Read the Ten Unforgivable Sins That Ruin Marriage and Clog the Divorce Courts

By Ursula Petrie

ILLUSTRATIONS By CHAS. OVERMAN.

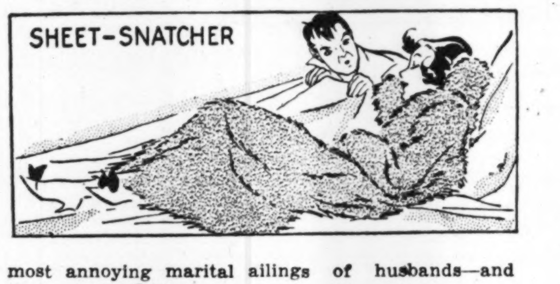
WHAT would you think is the real cause of most divorces?

Lying? Drinking? Cheating?

You're wrong. It isn't the big, vital faults which send a man and wife scurrying to the lawyers, but the petty little failings. The failings that you, you, and you have. And the dangerous part is you may not be aware of them.

If you don't believe it, just listen to what Sedley Brown and Alice Lowe Miles have to say. Mr. Brown and Mrs. Miles should know their connubial ABC's, for they're the doctors of the radio marriage clinic known as "Husbands and Wives." Last year 3000 husbands and wives aired their woes over this program; over 25,000 mismated mates wrote personal letters to the pair revealing their intimate problems.

Let's hear from Alice Lowe Miles first. The disgruntled wives pour their domestic deadlocks in her pink ear, and as a result here is her list of the 10 most annoying marital ailings of husbands—and their cures. Listen . . .

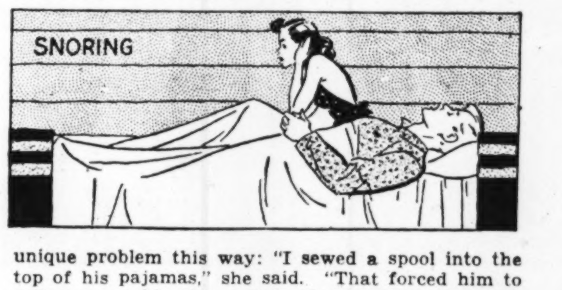


1—TIED TO MAMA'S APRON STRINGS.

A common specimen. He consults mamma about everything, to the complete distraction of his bride. Here's what one wife did. She left a note on the kitchen table for him to see when he came home one evening. It read: "Since you're always running home to your mother, I've decided to run home to my mother. You seem to enjoy consulting your mother about everything, so you and she can live in the home we've shared. It's not big enough for three of us." He woke up.

2—SNORING.

More than anything else, snoring has driven June brides to thoughts of Reno. One wife solved the unique problem this way: "I sewed a spool into the top of his pajamas," she said. "That forced him to roll over on his side and in that position he didn't snore."



3—STAYS OUT LATE AND WON'T TELL WHERE.

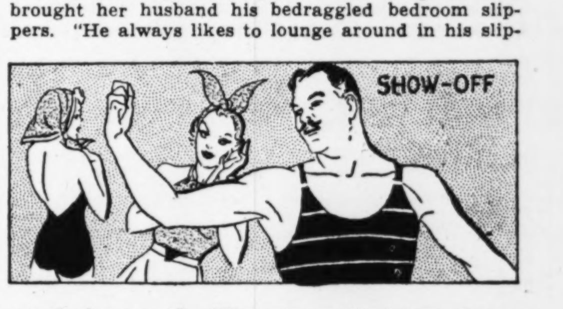
4—SHOWING OFF BEFORE YOUNG GIRLS.

You know the type. He's been snugly married 15 or 20 years, but he wants to prove he's still a devil with the girls. One wife who suspected that one of these impressionable girls was falling in love with her show-off husband evolved a scheme to end the infatuation. She invited the girl to spend a week-end at their home. The first evening the wife brought her husband his bedraggled bedroom slippers. "He always likes to lounge around in his slippers," she purred. "He gets so tired toward evening." After dinner she prepared a bicarbonate for him. "He always drinks this at night. It aids his digestion, the poor darling." It did the trick. The girl saw the man in the unglamourous surroundings of home and made a dash for her own boy friend. The man decided he was tired of being on his best behavior with other girls.



5—READS THE PAPER AT BREAKFAST.

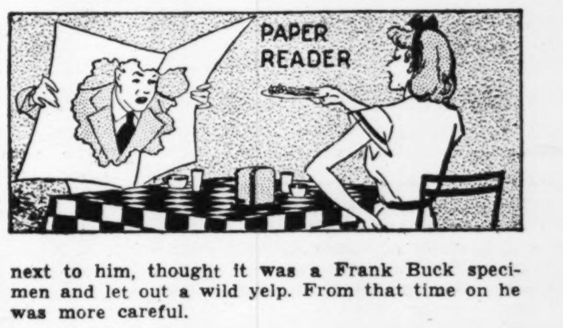
One long-suffering wife became tired of looking at a newspaper headline instead of her husband's face while eating her bacon and eggs. One morning her husband opened his paper and discovered an immense hole torn right through the middle. "What the"—— he sputtered. "Who did this?" "I did," she said sweetly. "I wanted to look at you and talk to you at breakfast."

6—CRITICISES WIFE'S MEALS.

When she has roast beef he wants filet of sole, and vice versa. Here's how the husband who always criticised his wife's dinners met his Waterloo. She prepared a menu each evening, presented it to her husband and asked him to check off the courses he preferred for the next evening's dinner. He got what he wanted, couldn't complain.

7—PULLING THE COVERS OFF THE BED.

One wife found her love turning into something quite different because of her husband's inconsiderate habit of pulling off the bedcovers during the night. One night after he was asleep, she arose, put on her fur coat and slept in it. In the morning, the startled husband looked at the befurred object next to him, thought it was a Frank Buck specimen and let out a wild yelp. From that time on he was more careful.



8—DROPS HIS CLOTHES ON THE FLOOR.

Some day there'll be special congressional legislation to punish the husband who litters up his room with his clothes and expects his wife to pick up each piece and hang it up carefully. But until then, this clever wife's solution will do. She placed a barrel at the foot of the stairs and swept all of the articles which her husband had carelessly dropped on the floor right into the barrel. When he looked for his clothes the next morning he found them there. He was cured.

9—ALWAYS GROUCHY IN THE MORNING.

This wife settled her husband's chronic grouchiness sensibly. She decided to make his mornings as cheerful as possible so that he would have no cause for being irritable. She placed fresh flowers on the breakfast table, served his breakfast on attractive dishes and made special pains to see that she herself looked appealing. She also made him cut his midnight icebox raiding, working on the theory that a heavy stomach before bedtime makes for temper at breakfast. She was right.

10—DOESN'T GIVE HIS WIFE HOUSE MONEY.

Even Einstein couldn't budget a household on the money some husbands give their wives. One wife decided that she would run her home like a boarding house. She presented her husband with a bill for household expenses each week. "If you don't pay you don't eat." P. S.—He paid.

Return of Prettiness in Clothes -:- -:- By Marjorie Hillis

IT must be 15 or 20 years ago that prettiness went out of fashion and it's had a long, consistent exile. It was in the days when Clare Eames, with her long, distinguished face, played on New York stages, and Yvette Guilbert, with her fascinating ugliness, was a famous diseuse, that we began to be contemptuous of pretty things. From then on, smart fashions were sleek instead of ruffly, coiffures were severe instead of fluffy, and the most admired women were elegant instead of pretty. I suspect that no one ever objected sincerely to a pretty face, but no one admitted an admiration, except for pretty little girls. Prettiness was distinctly ingenue in a period when every one seemed to want to be sophisticated.

I have read articles claiming that prettiness would never come back, that a taste for it was a characteristic of an adolescent nation and that once we'd passed this stage and learned to appreciate true elegance, we'd never return to our childish loves. But that theory doesn't seem to be working out altogether. To be sure, current standards of what is most desirable in the way of beauty are very different from those of the curly pretty-pretty period. There are probably few women who wouldn't rather look like Ilka Chase than like Mary Pickford.

But clothes have unquestionably relented. The evening mode is a swirl of organza ruffles and off-the-shoulder picturesqueness. Sleek gowns are still extremely chic, but they are usually frankly mature, which few women over 16 want to be. Hats are brimmed and beflowered and ribbon-trimmed. Coiffeurs are going through a terrific struggle to invent hair-dos that are curly and flattering and still trim and sophisticated, and frequently slip over into the curly side.

We aren't quite ready to go in for unlimited prettiness. Sports clothes still shun the quality (as they should) and daytime clothes approach it pretty gingerly. If they don't, they are usually chichi or frankly dowdy. But it's gaining on us and we may all be wearing baby-blue sashes and pink rose-buds again before we're many years older.

In any case, the word "pretty" is coming back to its rightful place in the language. Today, for the first time in years, you can say that a dress is pretty without seeming to be just a shade superior. You can even say a woman is pretty without seeming catty. The use of the word doesn't mark you as a country cousin who doesn't know.

Prettiness is unquestionably making a come-back.

—o-o—

SOME TIME AGO, a kind author sent me a copy of a very small book she'd just written—such a thin little volume that it promptly got lost between some magazines on my table and has just reappeared. Now that I've read it, I feel that I've kept a light hidden under a bushel, for it's a perfect answer to some of my readers who have asked for help and advice about writing.

The book is called "So You Want To Write," and the author is Esther L. Schwartz, a woman whom I should like to meet. She looks at writing as just what it is, a craft to be learned by good hard work, like any other craft. She has no high-flown notions about genius being a kind of light from Heaven that falls on you and, presto, you write a masterpiece. That may happen to some people, of course, but it evidently didn't happen to Mrs. Schwartz, any more than it did to me or to those who write us for help and advice.

Mrs. Schwartz (like most of us) writes to earn money, and does earn it. She learned to do it by the trial-and-error method and by keeping at it, which is the only way I know for all but a very talented few. But she applied a lot of practical ideas to the process of learning and in her book she tells about them frankly and clearly, giving the names of magazines, editors, teachers, and the amounts of the checks she received as a result. I should think that any ambitious young writer would be helped by what she tells, whether he writes her type of story and article or some other variety. The principles behind most literary successes are pretty much the same.

One of Mrs. Schwartz's theories which is right after my own heart is that you ought to write about the thing you know about, and write about it in the way most natural to you. I have never understood the people who live in New York and write about the Wild West or Darkest Africa, or those who soak themselves in Hemingway or O. Henry before putting pen to paper. I also agree with Mrs. Schwartz in her belief that the way to write (if you can write at all) is to write; practically every day and regardless of whether you have any ideas to write about or not. The best ideas often come in the middle of a dull morning when you've been grinding away and getting nowhere. And I doubt if many people accomplish much in the way of literature if they try only when an idea drives them to it. Certainly in my own case, the pickings would be even slimmer than they are. I usually have to have a pad and pencil in my hand to get even a whiff of an idea.

A final theory that I would like to applaud is that of getting professional criticism through a writing course, an editor ,or an agent. Your friends may be excellent literary critics, but not when they are criticising you. The most would-be-helpful starts with an unconscious belief that it's pretty wonderful that you write at all. He will tell you with perfect sincerity that your story is as good as Maupassant's—but the editor may think, quite rightly, that it's terrible!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN

By Dorothy Coleman

IT LOOKS as if Hollywood were trying to beat the censors to the draw, perhaps with a weather eye cocked on the fate of Manhattan's burlesque houses. At any rate it has served notice on the bald-headed papas and the rest of the waiting world that Gypsy Rose Lee, who furnished most of the eye interest in the last Follies, has gone respectable in her art since she sold out to the movies. She is to be palmed off on the cinema addicts not as a strip-tease artist, but as a grande dame, lorgnettes and all.

The long way up from Minsky to mink has probably taught her enough tricks for the role, but we can't help feeling the film producers have shown a lack of economy. Anyway, bringing up the subject gives us an opening to repeat a bon mot a friend of ours got off at the time the Lunts were playing here in "Idiot's Delight." Devoted to Alfred the Lunt in the role of a suave cosmopolite, he felt cheated at having to watch him cavort as a burlesque agent in shiny pants. "Why," said he, "it's like asking you to watch Gypsy Rose Lee play Joan of Arc—in armor."

—o-o—

WHAT IT THIS, ANYWAY—a wave of moral reform that's sweeping the country? Movie moguls cast the Gypsy, whose talents run in quite a different direction, as a proper Polly . . . The city fathers of Kankakee, Ill., decree that plaster pants must be hastily run up for the 50 pieces of undraped statuary donated to a town school . . . And right here in St. Louis the parents of a former Veiled Prophet Queen, reigning in the era of skirts "smartly short in front and dipping to the heels in back," order the artist who painted her portrait for their home to add a few inches of skirt below the knees.

—o-o—

IF THAT'S her story she can stick to it, but we refuse to believe Jeanette MacDonald wore old studio shoes at her wedding to Gene Raymond simply to keep a bride's faith with the time-honored jingle. You know — "something borrowed, something blue, something old and something new." After all, she could have carried an old handkerchief, or borrowed a second-hand garter. No sir, she just wasn't taking a chance on her dogs barking during that long, long walk to the altar.

A FRIEND of ours who has agreed to teach some of her own charm to the girls at a character-building organization in town had a hard one put to her the other day. She had told her potential personality princesses that charm was, in the final analysis, only consideration for others.

One of them took her more literally than she expected. When she and her "boy friend" started home next evening after a movie, she declined his company, protesting that it was way out of his way to take her home and she would just go on alone. He demanded to know why, and she couldn't think of any good reason right off, without giving away her personality secrets, so she said she was meeting another boy on the way home! Now Boy Friend No. 1 won't speak to her. Dear Aunt Bella—what shall I do?

SOME PROVISION has at last been made locally for that worst of all public offenders—the squalling baby in the neighborhood picture palace. The Apollo Theater, comparatively new (opened last August) and oh, very moderne, movie house on De Baliviere, has a crying room. Called that, too. It's up a flight of stairs between the office of Manager Thomas McDermott and the operating booth. Mothers—sometimes fathers—who have no one at home with whom they can leave the bundle of blessedness, can take themselves off to the sound-proofed, glassed-in parlor facing the screen. Sound-proofed, that is, so that the yowls and howls of a colicky child don't disturb spectators below.

An amplifier directly overhead brings to mothers—sometimes fathers—every word of dialogue and every note of music. The sound effects are so good, in fact, the manager boasted, that one little old woman with not-so-sharp ears prefers to sit in the crying room on her regular Sunday afternoon excursions to the Apollo. Says she gets the gist of the picture better. Manager McDermott has made an exception in her case. Ordinarily he doesn't allow anyone without a babe-in-arms up there. He has to be particularly careful about excluding young couples because the crying chamber is dimly lighted and pretty private. On a fight night, for example, it was deserted.

Whole families can sit up there if they want to and there's room. But since there are only six seats, in two rows of three each, one back of the other, Manager McDearmott occasionally has to ask mother or father to go below and leave just one parent in charge of the obstreperous infants.

Oh, yes, we forgot to mention: The crying room is air-cooled like

By Dorothy Coleman

IT LOOKS as if Hollywood were trying to beat the censors to the draw, perhaps with a weather eye cocked on the fate of Manhattan's burlesque houses. At any rate it has served notice on the baldheaded papas and the rest of the waiting world that Gypsy Rose Lee, who furnished most of the eye interest in the last Follies, has gone respectable in her art since she sold out to the movies. She is to be palmed off on the cinema addicts not as a strip-tease artist, but as a grande dame, lorgnettes and all.

The long way up from Minsky to mink has probably taught her enough tricks for the role, but we can't help feeling the film producers have shown a lack of economy. Anyway, bringing up the subject gives us an opening to repeat a bon mot a friend of ours got off at the time the Lunts were playing here in "Idiot's Delight." Devoted to Alfred the Lunt in the role of a suave cosmopolite, he felt cheated at having to watch him cavort as a burlesque agent in shiny pants. "Why," said he, "it's like asking you to watch Gypsy Rose Lee play Joan of Arc—in armor."

—o-o—

WHAT IT THIS, ANYWAY—a wave of moral reform that's sweeping the country? Movie moguls cast the Gypsy, whose talents run in quite a different direction, as a proper Polly . . . The city fathers of Kankakee, Ill., decree that plaster pants must be hastily run up for the 50 pieces of undraped statuary donated to a town school . . . And right here in St. Louis the parents of a former Veiled Prophet Queen, reigning in the era of skirts "smartly short in front and dipping to the heels in back," order the artist who painted her portrait for their home to add a few inches of skirt below the knees.

—o-o—

IF THAT'S her story she can stick to it, but we refuse to believe Jeanette MacDonald wore old studio shoes at her wedding to Gene Raymond simply to keep a bride's faith with the time-honored jingle. You know — "something borrowed, something blue, something old and something new." After all, she could have carried an old handkerchief, or borrowed a second-hand garter. No sir, she just wasn't taking a chance on her dogs barking during that long, long walk to the altar.

A FRIEND of ours who has agreed to teach some of her own charm to the girls at a character-building organization in town had a hard one put to her the other day. She had told her potential personality princesses that charm was, in the final analysis, only consideration for others.

One of them took her more literally than she expected. When she and her "boy friend" started home next evening after a movie, she declined his company, protesting that it was way out of his way to take her home and she would just go on alone. He demanded to know why, and she couldn't think of any good reason right off, without giving away her personality secrets, so she said she was meeting another boy on the way home! Now Boy Friend No. 1 won't speak to her. Dear Aunt Bella—what shall I do?

SOME PROVISION has at last been made locally for that worst of all public offenders—the squalling baby in the neighborhood picture palace. The Apollo Theater, comparatively new (opened last August) and oh, very moderne, movie house on De Baliviere, has a crying room. Called that, too. It's up a flight of stairs between the office of Manager Thomas McDermott and the operating booth. Mothers—sometimes fathers—who have no one at home with whom they can leave the bundle of blessedness, can take themselves off to the sound-proofed, glassed-in parlor facing the screen. Sound-proofed, that is, so that the yowls and howls of a colicky child don't disturb spectators below.

An amplifier directly overhead brings to mothers—sometimes fathers—every word of dialogue and every note of music. The sound effects are so good, in fact, the manager boasted, that one little old woman with not-so-sharp ears prefers to sit in the crying room on her regular Sunday afternoon excursions to the Apollo. Says she gets the gist of the picture better. Manager McDermott has made an exception in her case. Ordinarily he doesn't allow anyone without a babe-in-arms up there. He has to be particularly careful about excluding young couples because the crying chamber is dimly lighted and pretty private. On a fight night, for example, it was deserted.

Whole families can sit up there if they want to and there's room. But since there are only six seats, in two rows of three each, one back of the other, Manager McDearmott occasionally has to ask mother or father to go below and leave just one parent in charge of the obstreperous infants.

Oh, yes, we forgot to mention: The crying room is air-cooled like

Eyelet Frocks, Black Dresses To the Front

They Are Taking the Place of Floral Prints and Pastel Tints.

THE vivid floral prints and the dainty pastel tints which have been dancing through the early summer are getting out of step with fashion. Into the limelight in their place are coming crisp eyelet frocks of snowy whiteness and sheer black dresses unrelieved by color.

Those who are thinking of the present and not worrying about August or September are choosing the white dresses which look so cool and perishable. Others with an eye to the future as well as to vacation needs are buying black marquisette, net, chiffon or lace.

The crisp white dresses are liked by matrons as well as by their daughters, the only difference is in the styling of the models. Redingote themes with tailored necklines and short sleeves or else the typical shirtwaist models are the choices of the matrons while young girls are demanding lower necklines and a more picturesque quality. Accents of black are sophisticated trimmings apparent in the form of wide grosgrain bindings, belts and slips. Pastel ribbons, or artificial flowers enhance the younger models as do pastel tinted slips.

THE INCREASING interest this summer in the garden-party type of frock has resulted from numerous outdoor weddings and al fresco evening entertainments. The sheer cotton formal or semi-formal costume also is in demand for country club and roof garden dancing but seen most on young girls at the more public gathering places. Their elders are wearing less formal attire and saving their long-skirted cotton frocks for only their friends to see.

Notable among the sheer black frocks for evening wear are those with the shirtwaist emphasis. Some add their own matching capes and thus become a complete ensemble that doubtless will prove popular for vacationing as well as for wear in St. Louis. The double-duty lace frock also is appearing in the shops as an ideal vacation costume, its formal low-cut bodice covered with a cape or bolero. Because lace does not muss and can be donned after packing without the need of pressing it is recommended for travelers.

White decorations are popular with sheer black dinner and evening dresses. The popularity of white flower trimming is apparent in contrast to the vogue of white lingerie touches so much in demand a year ago. Tiny beaded bandings of white also are observed and give a hint of the beaded trend which is expected to increase with the autumn.

Shades of Summer

All of those unusual shades which are associated with Mexico and South America are being stressed this summer so a girl who has a scarf of Aztec red, a frock of Mayan blue or a hat of Toltec green becomes a fashion leader. Should none of these three suit her fancy, here are some other intriguing hues from which to choose: Incan gold, Brazilian orange, Argentine rose, Chile green and Peruvian blue.

Black Frock Accents

The woman who enjoys being ahead of the seasons will be wearing before many days a black frock which replaces its white accents with those of brilliant color. Sashes which are shaped so that they can be worn well down over the hips are the most important accessories to supply the vivid note although bright flowers also are to be used extensively.

NEW FASHION WRINKLES

ALL of the talk about summer slumps has nothing to do with the field of gadgets. Likewise the inventors of new fashion wrinkles are going right along as though this were not considered the vacation season! Here are only a few of the new ideas introduced to the jaded public:

Especially timely when two-thirds of the population of St. Louis are in the water or would like to be is a beach thermometer. It pins on your dress or you can carry it in your beach bag—there are colors to harmonize with the most complicated color scheme so its all right in public. You know how hot it is on the beach by looking at its face and when you dip it in the water you learn its exact temperature. All of which saves embarrassment for those shivering mortals who have to clamor out if the water happens to be too cold.

EQUALLY AS ingenious but of a different sort is a new compact which has a "windshield wiper" to remove powder from the mirror inside the top. The wiper works automatically as the compact is opened due to the work of a small bar that is supported by two arms and slides up and down the mirror. As for the compact itself, the enamel and the leather coverings are considered very swanky.

Another gadget in the realm of beauty aids devotes itself to the reduction of sagging, bulging chins. This is a new type of chin strap having the inner surface of the rubber covered with raised dots—placed there to automatically massage the skin as the wearer breathes. Ribbon ties hold the strap in place.

A NIGHT CAP is another oddity taken from a long past era and dressed up to keep a girl's coiffure in place. The 1937 version is made of fine netting and equipped with drawstrings of matching colored ribbon. The ribbons are pulled up tight so the cap fits your head size and then tied quaintly under the chin or more flippantly on top of your head. Pastels as well as dark shades are included in the assortment.

New tricks with fabrics also are making fashion history. One of the latest of these has to do with velvet. After accomplishing something in making velvets less susceptible to crushing, the creators of these elegant materials have gone a step farther. They now promise that with the new fabrics available for next autumn's wear you can spill water on your dress, sit on it while it is damp and even wash out many stains without injury to the matt of the cloth. All of which should be good news to the college girls who insist upon going through "rush week" on hot September days in their velvet costumes!

Color harmonizes are going through a revolutionary period so it is not surprising to learn that next autumn's gloves will have fingers of different shades. At the present the designers are toying with the idea of having only two fingers different from the rest—a black glove with two red fingers, for example—but once the fad is started there's no telling where it will end.

Hat Ornaments

A tailored hat for summer no longer is complete without some novel ornament. A grosgrain ribbon still appears but a bug, a monogram, an animal or a butterfly must be added for the final touch of smartness. Ribbons that are arranged in odd shapes and tiny bouquets of enamel flowers likewise may be clipped into place ot display the trend toward trimmed millinery.

"ANN'S ON HER VACATION, BUT WE COULD DROP IN AND SEE WHAT HER HUSBAND IS BURNING FOR HIS DINNER!"

Linen Is Most Popular Fabric At Hunt Meet

NEW YORK, June 26.

WITH informality the fashion formula at the United Hunt Meet, at the estate of Charles Hickox in Roslyn, L. I., linen dresses and suits scored the outstanding individual success of the day. This popular fabric, running the gamut from the sheerest weaves to the hardiest, was equally versatile in colors and patterns.

The monotone linen dresses were noted in the thin gauze weight (so important this summer, in the perennially popular handkerchief weave, as well as the slubby cotton knit texture. They were tailored in silhouette, with the button front coat dress greatly favored, while quite a few women chose two-piece jacket costumes.

Natural led the color parade in these dresses, with pigskin or brown alligator buttons and belts usually effectively combined. Deep wine, navy, buttercup yellow and a lovely mossy green were the other most noted colors. But, no matter what the color of the frock, a striking contrast shade in belt, buttons, ascot or bows was the fashion first of the day.

Especially outstanding was Mrs. Edward F. Hutton in a two-piece natural nubby linen dress with allover white embroidery scrolled on the jacket.

—o-o—

"FLIVVER" MARSTON also sponsored natural linen in a cotton knit button front coat dress. Brown alligator belt and a natural wrapped crownless turban in the same linen weave completed her costume.

Two young sisters chose the same linen dress in reverse color combinations and were very effective. One chose the one-piece dress in wine handkerchief linen striped horizontally across bodice and hips with narrow bindings of navy and white linen and decorated at intervals with tiny white bows. Her sister wore the same dress in navy with wine and white striped detail.

The bold-patterned hand-blocked linen dresses were very gay and attractive, following very closely the peasant influence with tight basque waists, low square necks and full skirts. This dirndl silhouette was especially favored by the younger generation.

Extremely smart were the porous weave linen dresses in small checked patterns. Four were noted in wine, checked with small squares in wine and white. One was a coat dress with navy lapels, buttons and belt. This same check pattern (which, incidentally, closely resembles your favorite tweeds) was noted on a very smart young woman in green, patterned with yellow and white. She wore a green straw square-crowning native Tyrolean hat and carried a green leather Schiaparelli shoulder bag.

—o-o—

THE TAILORED LINEN SUITS were sponsored in the heavy smooth French or Irish linen with white, Gauguin pink and turquoise blue the favored colors. The jackets were severely tailored, single-breasted, straight back with moderate shoulders, and the skirts were slightly flared or gored. Several skirts had three or four inverted pleats back and front. A fresh white single-breasted linen suit was worn with a giddy red and white polka dot silk blouse; the same fabric wrapped "Mammy" fashion around the wearer's head.

Several of the deep pink suits were combined with wine or navy accessories; while an attractive turquoise costume had a white handkerchief linen blouse, rather on the feminine side, with brown shoes, bag and crownless turban completing the picture.

Popular Ensembles

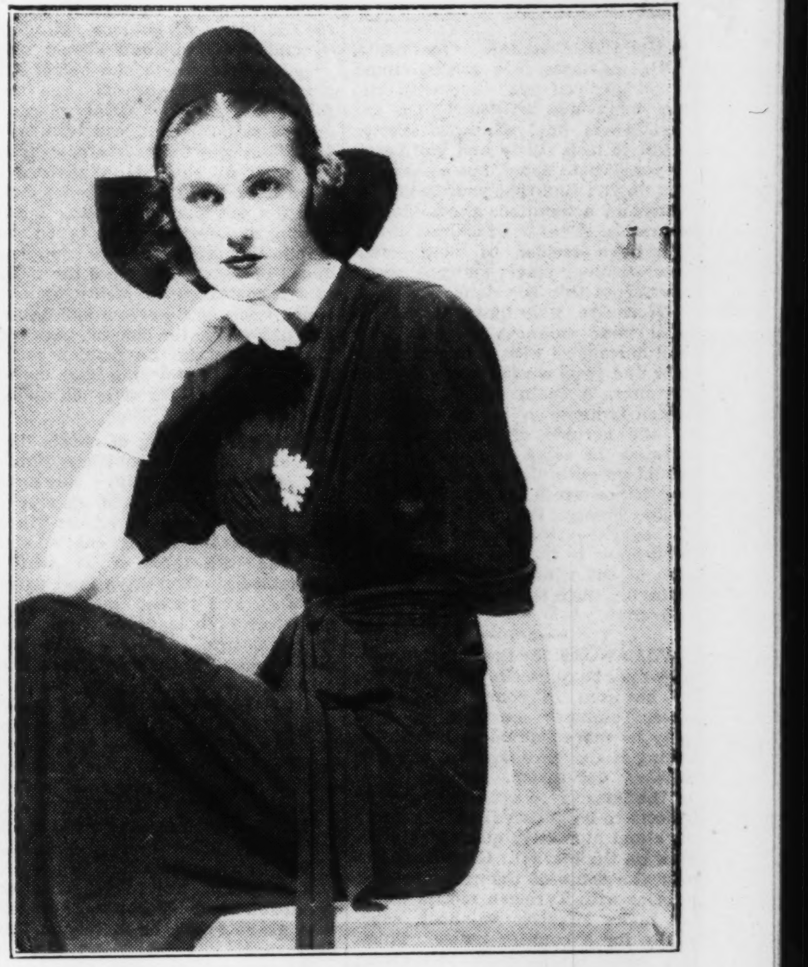
Dresses with halo turbans to match are becoming so numerous that a woman can get one of these ensembles ranging from chambray or pique for active sports wear to silk jersey for the cocktail hour. Pastels and white are the favorites regardless of the fabrics, doubtless due to the fact that the crownless hats with their twisted bandeaux show off to better advantage of light tones than they do of dark shades.

Mid - Summer Hat

A black velvet hat which has a pleated back is a midsummer fashion. The brim which is wide, usually turns off of the face and the crown, deep at the back, permits the pleated back to extend well down on the nape of the neck. The hat does very well without trimming unless the wearer wants to add a tiny flower or a novel white hat pin.

Knitting goes quicker with a whirligig yarn-holder. Commercially wound balls and the cardboard cones on which cotton yarns are wound slip easily over the wires. Hank yarn is wound right on the holder.

SUMMER FROCK



DULL BLACK JERSEY MAKES THIS ATTRACTIVE FROCK WITH THE SHIRRED BOSOM EFFECT SET OFF A RHINESTONE ORNAMENT. THE NECKLINE IS ADJUSTABLE AND CAN BE WORN HIGH OR IN A DEEP V. THE OFF-THE-FACE HAT WITH THE RUFFLED FLANGE IN THE BACK IS OF BLACK FELT.

ARE YOU SEEKING THE CITY'S COOLEST DRESS?

AT least half of the shopping tours of the coming week will be devoted to a search for the coolest dress in town, while the others will be concerned with vacation clothes. For those who are staying in St. Louis and braving the threatened heat here are a few suggestions:

Prints look less mussed and soiled after a hard day's wear than do most solid colored materials. Also, if they are selected with care, they are as cool in appearance as white or pastels. Combinations of black, brown, blue, green or wine and white are ideally suited to St. Louis summers and offer a maximum of service, while the dainty floral colorings on white backgrounds are destined to be dressier favorites.

For hard usage and tailored emphasis consider shirtwaist frocks that are made of lawn, batiste, voile and handkerchief linen in alliances of dark tones and white. They'll look well after a hard day's wear and launder so perfectly and easily that they may be worn again and again. These same materials are the daintiest and coolest available for leisure hours also, and assume a festive appearance when the floral patterns are accented with Valenciennes lace ruffling and embroidered batiste yokes or collars.

PRINTED CHIFFONS of the best quality deserve listing also among the cool favorites in St. Louis. Again the same color combinations mentioned above offer a maximum of service and style. A navy blue chiffon, for example, that is dotted with white motifs not only is businesslike, but a good traveling companion. If it has its own cape or jacket, so much the better for vacation needs.

Other prints to consider in the choice of satisfactory summer frocks for general daytime wear are the novelty sheers that are made of synthetics and the printed jerseys. The jersey materials, also synthetics, are appearing in variety and are featured of white and pastels as well as printed designs. Their texture and finish serve to eliminate creasing, which is an ideal feature of any hot-weather fabric.

Shantung, available now in printed and solid colors, are among this summer's popular fabrics and deserve their friends because of their cool, washable qualities. When frocks of shantung are designed along simple lines so that there are no excess pleats to get out of place, they can withstand a hard day at the office without looking too crumpled. Good tailoring and good quality of fabric are essentials, though, because imitation shantungs are harsher of weave than their namesakes and show their flaws after several hours of wearing.

A FABRIC which has attained considerable favor this summer is of the hopsacking type. Its loose weave and natural color are points in its favor. Accents of bright colors such as vivid green or red or both relieve any somber note and enhance the attractiveness of a costume. Other loose-woven fabrics that are made of cottons and synthetics do not wrinkle easily, usually can be washed and are welcome in a summer wardrobe.

Every hot-weather wardrobe needs at least one dark frock for the uncertain, cloudy day or for that day when all washable dresses have gone to the laundry. Cotton lace, net, tucked marquisette and chiffon are materials to consider, but care must be taken to select a tailored model, otherwise the costume will look too dressed-up for street or office wear.

Looking Forward To Autumn Hats

ELASTIC bands won't be needed to keep most of the autumn hats in place because the milliners are planning to pull them down on women's heads. Most of the depth is at the back which means also that height of crowns must be increased. Incidentally the page boy coiffure will have to go and a shorter hair cut take its place.

Sports hats of felt that have been created for wear with travel costumes are the first to introduce the new millinery silhouette. A trick of the milliners to pave the way for high crowns is to slope the crowns of the travel felts so that most length is at the back.

LET ME SUGGEST

by Josephine Walter

SUMMER window treatments, like spouses, are among those things "you can't live with and you can't live without." On the first warm day, winter draperies begin to look stuffy and you yearn to yank them down, but as soon as you do you find that your room has taken on a haunted, ghost-like appearance. That is, of course, unless you have decided to hang something in their place; and one grand answer to this is valances.

Of course, it is quite possible to plan your valances so that they will harmonize with both your summer and your winter schemes. For instance, a plain wood valance which is more or less an extension of the cornice of the room and painted the same color as the wall would go with either type of room. But if you are a person who really enjoys change, it is perfectly possible to have two sets of valances, both made to fit into slots at either side of the window frame, so that changing them is in no way a major operation.

VALANCES for the summer window may be quite simple if they are to be used in combination with sheer summer curtains, or they may be more individual and interesting if they are to form the sole window decoration. Among those of the latter type are the charming effects to be gotten from the many new and attractive quilted chintzes now on the market. Ginghams, linens and some of the new printed fabrics with Tyrolean motifs would all make effective valances, especially for a country house. There are also innumerable interesting wall paper borders which would make distinctive window treatments for summery rooms.

—o-o—

Even more individualized effects than those already suggested might be worked out, especially if your room had some definite motif. For instance, a room with nautical flavor might have a valance with applied decoration of either shells or anchors while one with a circus motif might have the valance projecting out in the manner of an awning with a scalloped effect. I even saw a most amusing valance, once made of old victrola records set on in an overlapping design. And, if you would prefer to eliminate curtains altogether, you might try a frame covering the top and two sides of the window frame. Such a valance may be made of plywood and covered with any sort of material you desire and to be doubly effective the inside edge may be worked out in a scrolled or scalloped effect.

● WHILE WE'RE on the subject of summer treatments, we might as well mention something about the treatment of summer garbage pails. For, adjacent to the kitchen door as they are, they attract flies which are likely to swarm into the house every time we open the screen door. A grand solution, both to lessen the fly menace and to discourage marauding dogs, is to sink the pail into the ground. Of course, if you care to, you may buy a very special kind of pail with a lever to push the top up and a removal container, which was designed especially for this purpose, or you may use your regular, battered old can. Your garbage man may object to the extra work of pulling the pail out of the ground but the time spent in soothing his irate feelings will be more than made up by the time saved in doing an adagio around the house with fly swatter in hand.

Remark we wish we had thought up ourselves: "The recline of Western civilization," written by some bright advertising writer trying to sell summer garden furniture. We don't know why, exactly, but this flip phrase appeals to our sense of something or other.

—o-o—

● AND, AS LONG as we don't seem to be writing in a very serious vein this week, we might as well comment on several other things that have attracted our attention recently but which aren't much help in the actual decorating of houses. For instance, lately in successive issues of one of the decorating magazines there have been pictures of Mr. Morgan's gardens. To quote, one was of "Mr. J. P. Morgan's Rose Garden," another of "Mr. J. P. Morgan's Boxwood Garden," and still another of "Mr. J. P. Morgan's Pleached Allee." We can't help wondering if this is another idea of his publicity counsel's to make him seem more human. After all, no one, after seeing the lovely gardens which Mr. Morgan has surrounded himself with, could ever again believe that he is a complete old meany.

ANOTHER inconsequential tidbit: Someone commented the other day that half the women in St. Louis were buying houses and the other half were trying to sell them. It is true that the real estate market in St. Louis has been unusually active the past few months and that much of that activity is due to the many women who recently have gone into the real estate business. That is one business that always has been more or less regarded as exclusively male; just why I don't know, for certainly a woman has certain advantages over a man in this business.

OUTDOOR Eating Can Be Such FUN

. . . NO REASON WHY YOU CAN'T SERVE HIM HIS FAVORITE DISHES.

BY SHEILA HIBBEN

FAMOUS AUTHORITY ON FINE FOODS.

THE cause of outdoor eating is making slow, but I should say, sure progress in the home. Of course, our restaurants and tea rooms are already firmly planted on the sidewalks, in courts, under umbrellas and in areaways, so that no power on earth is going to get them back inside before Labor day. But it's not the restaurants I am talking about—they have taken to carbon monoxide with the soup like ducks to water. Nor does the ultra smart hostess with plenty of servants (who gets her outdoor table, all shiny with the newest gadgets, photographed in the fashion magazines) need any urging from me to dine on her terrace or lunch under her pergola.

No, I am thinking of people like you and me, who somehow never get around to providing ourselves with all these convertible canopies, and hot-water dishes, or the right kind of garden dining chairs, and all that. It's those of us whose scrambled summer lives land us at a sweet and rather shabby farm house, or even leave us right here in town, who need a little encouragement in setting our tables outside.

At the farm there may be a shady grape arbor, or tree, or maybe in the city backyard there is nothing more promising than some petunias and a scrubby little nondescript tree, all the same there will come a time this summer when you can't bear being shut in by the four walls of the dining room a minute longer, and if you are to eat another mouthful, ever, it's got to be under that grape arbor, or merely in the back yard.

My advice to the girl who gets taken this way, is, not to wait until she gets together all the furniture and the gadgets, but just then and there set up any old table under the apple tree and announce dinner.

Of course (she might as well face it) there is going to be some dyed-in-the-wool conservative, (it's usually a husband) who will complain that he doesn't like to eat outdoors, and what-have-you-got-a-dining-room-for, and all that. Just pay no attention, or rather, don't let on that you are paying attention, for it is not outdoor dining, really, that these old fogies object to, but the fact that they associate eating outdoors with a rather sketchy sort of meal—cold ham and tomato surprise and that sort of thing.

Decidedly, what you have got to do is not to worry your pretty head about gadgets and garden dining paraphernalia, but think up menus that are practical to serve out-of-doors, and at the same time so succulent and appetizing that even a husband will look forward to eating in the garden with zest. For men may be different, but husbands are pretty much alike, in that a sunset (even the finest sunset) when accompanied by nothing more than a slithering aspic, will never in this world convert them whole-heartedly to al fresco eating.

To make a success of dining in the great outdoors, so that there will be no sigh of relief when the man of your family gets his legs again under the dining-room table, you have got to do a lot of planning. Have one hot dish, and, if possible, let it be something served in the dish in which it is cooked—food keeps hot longer that way, and it eliminates a sauceboat (and gravies, like husbands, have never learned to co-operate on an outdoor table). Do away with hot vegetables, except those cooked with your main dish. Serve a salad with the hot meat or fish. Don't clutter up the table with pickles and jellies, and don't have more than two courses. Just keep to these simple rules, and eating outdoors these hot nights will be as simple as it is pleasant.

DON'T THINK THAT NEWEST GADGETS AND PLENTY OF SERVANTS ARE NECESSARY FOR SUCCESSFUL AL FRESCO DINING.

ADVENTURES IN FOOD

CHICKEN IN CASSEROLE

One young roasting chicken.
Butter.
One-third pound salt pork.
One tablespoon chopped onion.
Six small white onions.
Four small young carrots.
Eight very small new potatoes.
Chopped parsley.
Salt and pepper.
One-half cupful chicken broth.

Clean the chicken carefully, rub with salt and pepper inside and out, and truss up with cotton string after having put the chopped onion inside. Melt one tablespoonful of butter in a heavy frying pan, add salt pork cut in dice, and brown the chicken in it on all sides. Transfer the chicken and pork to an earthenware casserole, add one-half cupful of broth (or water), cover as closely as possible, and cook for half an hour in moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit).

Peel onions carefully, peel and quarter the young carrots and brown them in the frying pan in which chicken has browned. Add to the chicken in the casserole and continue cooking for another half hour.

Peel and boil separately the little potatoes, drain them, moisten with butter and sprinkle with parsley and add to the chicken just before sending to the table.

SCALLOPED SALMON (for 4)

One pound salmon.
Butter.
One-third pound mushrooms.
One teaspoon chopped onion.
One teaspoon chopped celery.
Milk.
Two medium size potatoes.
Sifted breadcrumbs.

Plunge the salmon into highly seasoned boiling water and cook until tender. Drain and remove all skin and bones and flake with a fork. Boil potatoes, run through a ricer and add one tablespoon of butter, salt and pepper and enough milk to make soft. Add to the fish and mix well. Melt three tablespoonfuls of butter in a saucepan, add peeled and sliced mushrooms and chopped onion and cook until tender. Pour in one-half cupful of milk, add finely-chopped parsley and cook gently for eight minutes. Combine with fish mixture, turn into shallow baking dish, sprinkle with sifted breadcrumbs and moisten with melted butter. Bake in hot oven (400) until brown. Serve with a lettuce salad or with lettuce and tomatoes.

TOMATO JUICE FRAPPE

Open a can of tomato juice and add to it the slightest dash of grated onion, one teaspoonful of horseradish, one teaspoonful of sugar, juice of half a lime, one-half coffee spoonful of celery salt and tabasco and salt to taste. Freeze in a mechanical refrigerator to the mushy stage and serve in glasses with slice of lime on top. Be sure and chill the glasses in the refrigerator before filling them.

Riotous Color Schemes Reach The Mid-West

ALL of those riotous color schemes which dot the California beaches and have won that State such fame for daring sports wear combinations are at last being accepted in the Middle West. On the tennis courts of the country clubs, on the club verandas and on the sand adjoining some of the favorite swimming spots one sees play clothes reflecting the choice of the California sun-worshippers.

Two bright shades are better than one according to the rule of the West Coast that is being introduced in this section. Tri-color themes, however, are seldom used—obviously because it would be very difficult to find more than two of such brilliant hue that blend well together.

Some of the more conservative fashion followers who see the new and striking combinations may not cast their vote of approval, but the wearers won't let this interfere with their selections or their pleasures. To describe the shades is difficult because they have so many different names, many of Mexican or South American inspiration. There's a tone of pottery gold, for example, which is liked for a shirt to be worn with a pottery red pair of slacks. Equally popular are the alliances of red and green and those of red and pottery blue.

Desert cloth which flaunts its colors as forcefully as any of the season's fabrics is used for many of these gay sports togs. Pique and peasant linen are others that take all of the dye they can get and supply some of the brightest play clothes.

When white or conservative dark shades such as navy or brown happen to be the choice for active sports wear, accessories assume the burden of brilliance.

Canned Meat for Emergencies.

AN emergency shelf of canned meats is an insurance. The unexpected guest often brings as much trouble as pleasure, and since it is the unwritten law of hospitality that the trouble factor be hidden, the whole burden of the case rests on the one who plans the meals. It is not a light burden! Insurance is needed, especially in the summer.

With all kinds of canned meats at your disposal, choose the emergency shelf with care. Consider the tastes of those you feed. Don't buy tripe, if they don't like tripe, and don't leave it out if they do. If chicken is a favorite, stock all the types on the market . . . minced, fricassee, boned, breasts, a la king, and keep your favorite recipes on tap, in a drawer or file.

Stews are available, canned with gravy, and make a pleasant surprise for a hot dish on a day suddenly stormy or cool. Topped with biscuit dough or pastry, or with additional gravy and dumplings, or with curls of crisped bacon, a lamb, beef or kidney stew is very fine eating, and can be stretched to satisfy the hungriest of the hungry.

Tongue cans beautifully, even gaining in tenderness and flavor. Ox tongue, lamb tongue and lunch tongue are in almost every market, and make the most delicious sandwiches, cuts for a cold plate, or a gelatin salad, and are very practical warmed up in a spicy sauce on short notice.

Canned spaghetti and macaroni with a hot sauce and meat balls are a favorite with everyone, and inexpensive. The cans can be dropped in boiling water and forgotten for 20 minutes or so, or the contents of the cans can be turned into a saucepan and heated to the boiling point quickly. Watch closely, and toss with a fork occasionally as the spaghetti will catch on the bottom of the pan with surprising suddenness.

Canned roast beef can be used in all the places dedicated to left-over roast beef. A very fine gravy comes in cans, and it is an easy thing to heat it up and serve open-faced roast beef sandwiches with gravy, plenty of it, very hot. A large portion of buttered carrots and a sliced tomato with salt makes an easy and very satisfying dinner.

Canned corned beef and corned beef hash are old favorites. Sliced, cubed, toasted, there is no way of preparing these two dishes that is not popular with the whole family. A spread of good chili sauce makes a corned beef sandwich moist and flavorful. Sliced thin and spread with mustard, it makes a sandwich easy to eat and filling.

Hash may be sliced and broiled. In all brands you will find plenty of firm cubed potatoes. A large amount of ketchup, or a horseradish sauce should be served with this. Or it can be stirred up with a little boiling water and made moist and creamy to be served on squares of buttered toast with a poached egg or two.

There is another angle to canned meats. Quite often a menu change depends on time. If the meat must be cooked from scratch, there is no time for fancy-made dishes. No time for chicken custards, for pastries, for unusual, highly seasoned sauces. These things are the foods which women really like to make, and which, after years of plain cooking, they deserve time to make.

Coats of Many Colors for Fall

COATS of many colors have been featured so extensively in Paris that they are expected to be early fall fashion successes in this country. All of these coats are very brief and are made of elegant fabrics or of ribbons, thus indicating their place with evening dresses.

One French designer has introduced a little jacket made of two-inch velvet ribbon sewn together in vrtical strips, the ribbon combining shades of apple green, old blue, chamois, pink which has a blue cast and an orchid-purple. This is worn over a gown of black Chantilly lace. Another jacket is made of red and blue grosgrain ribbon interlaced to suggest a woven pattern.

Caracas Eggs

Four ounces dried beef
Two tablespoons butter
One teaspoon chili powder.
One-half pound American cheese, grated.
Two cups stewed tomatoes.
Six eggs, beaten.

Shred beef. Place in skillet with butter, chili powder, cheese and tomatoes. Cook over low heat, stirring constantly until mixture bubbles. Add eggs, stirring constantly until mixture thickens. Remove from heat. Serve at once. Approximate yield: Six portions.

Fruit Salad Dressing

Ingredients:
Two eggs, beaten light.
Two tablespoons flour.
Two-third cups sugar.
One lemon, juice.
One orange, juice.
One-half cup cream, whipped.
One cup canned pineapple juice.

Combine the eggs, which have been beaten until light, the flour and the sugar. Add the fruit juices and cook in a double-boiler, stirring constantly until thick. Cool and fold in the whipping cream.

The Polyantha Rose Is Best For Hardiness

It Blooms After Others Have Had Their Splurge and Have Faded Out.

By Harriet W. Chandler

THE Polyantha roses take up the burden of rose bloom after others have had their splurge and have faded out. Though not so spectacular as the hybrid teas and the hybrid perpetuals, these smaller roses have it all over the others for downright hardiness and continuous bloom.

When the Baby Ramblers just happened as a by-product of the breeding of climbing roses, they did not excite a lot of interest. But much improved varieties began to appear some 10 years ago, and from time to time ever since. Then rose lovers awoke and began to revalue them.

These sturdy little roses start blooming in May with the others and as one noted rosarian said of the old rose Hermosa, "They just didn't know how to stay out of bloom." Some varieties will even endure a severe freeze that will finish up everything else in the garden. Because of their hardiness and general freedom from disease, they are the most enduring rose we have, and one of the cheapest and easiest to grow.

NEVER a specimen rose, the Polyantha must be used in mass plantings for best effect, or as edging or hedges where their cheerful bloom and healthy foliage will make a fine display.

The first Baby Ramblers showed flowers that were nothing more than little red or pink tufts on irregular, thin bushes, but now the size of the bloom is larger, and the shape greatly improved; fragrance has appeared in many sorts, and the stature of the plant has developed. We can now have these roses from only a few inches high for the rock garden to sturdy bushes three feet tall, besides some of spreading habit, especially adapted for mass planting where color effect is desired. As accents in shrubbery borders, clumps of the Polyantha roses are especially pleasing, holding their bright flowers against the rich green of the shrubs whose flowers and berries may stand out in gay rivalry.

The large flowering Polyanthas were originated in Denmark by a native rosarian named Poulsen. His idea was to produce a rose to stand the cold of a climate where hybrid teas must be treated as annuals. So he has given to Denmark and to the world the Poulsen strain of Polyantha roses, which are the nearest approach to a hardy, everblooming hybrid tea rose that we have.

KIRSTEN POULSEN, a brilliant scarlet, growing three feet high, is well used as a hedge, as is also Else Poulsen, a light pink. Permanent Wave, with curled petals, a child of Else Poulsen and quite a new rose, is also an interesting pink suitable for hedges or a background for lower growing annuals. Karen Poulsen made her debut in 1933 with flower clusters of a brilliant red, the wide single blooms giving the effect of poppies. This is a lower-growing variety which gives fine effect in mass plantings. Anne Poulsen, the latest of this family to come out, has large semi-double scarlet flowers which are as fragrant as any of the hybrid teas.

Another dainty little Polyantha, not of the Poulsen family but with the fragrance of a tea rose, is Natalie Nyples. Its flowers are like pink camellias with dainty rose-colored buds which continue to form throughout our hottest summers. La Marne, another pink, growing about three feet high, will tolerate quite heavy shade for most of the day and still give generously of its flowers throughout the season. The yellow, so much sought after in roses today is found among the polyanthas in sunshine, a double orange-yellow, and Rochester, a lighter yellow with a slight blush of pink.

LAFAYETTE is a lively cherry-crimson, and as a three-foot hedge in one of our county gardens has never failed to bring favorable comment to its proud owner. Little Pet is a good double white which is always in bloom. Yvonne Rabier, one of the small white Baby Ramblers, though rather shapeless, adds fragrance to its charms.

With the popularity of the miniature bouquets these small Polyanthas are invaluable for their daintiness and lasting qualities when cut. Combined with Baby-breath, the small buds and half open flowers can be made into very attractive corsages, which are so popularly worn these days. These Polyanthas have also given the rose world something new in color, a peculiar blend of pink and copper which is seen in Gloria Mundi. This is a very pretty flower when used alone with the background of a white house or trellis, but it seems to clash with other roses. In cameo this color is refined and mellowed and while not quite so startling, it is a better mixer. Both are small-flowered.

MODERN CLOSET

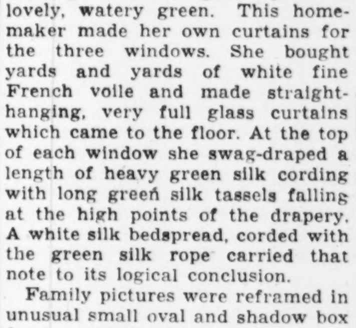
CHANGING DRAB ROOM INTO PLEASANT INTERIOR

"BEFORE" and "after" pictures always fascinate us. We love to see those photographs of mountainous women suddenly grown smartly sylph-like, those wrinkled worried faces miraculously smooth and untroubled. And particularly, do we like those pictures of dull, drab uninteresting rooms made over into pleasant, smart and welcoming interiors. We should have liked a "before" and "after" picture of a bedroom we saw recently.

Before it had been a typical bedroom—a suite of mahogany furniture, tie-back curtains and roses-and-leaves draperies, a rather nondescript paper on the walls and loads of family pictures trying to decorate the walls and only succeeding in giving a cluttered effect. An ingenious homemaker, plus the aid of a painter and paperhanger, changed all that into a room of infinite charm.



The walls were repapered in a plain white satin-striped pattern—the stripes wide and very "new" looking. The ceiling was paited a lovely, watery green. This homemaker made her own curtains for the three windows. She bought yards and yards of white fine French voile and made straight-hanging, very full glass curtains which came to the floor. At the top of each window she swag-draped a length of heavy green silk cording with long green silk tassels falling at the high points of the drapery. A white silk bedspread, corded with the green silk rope carried that note to its logical conclusion.

Family pictures were reframed in unusual small oval and shadow box frames and grouped in one corner of the room, and several fine French engravings took their places on the more important walls. These were framed uniformly in pale green with a narrow gold mat around each picture. The room was carpeted in a deep blue-green and a really luxurious white throw-rug was placed in front of the dressing table. A small gilt French chair was bought to replace the old dressing table bench and a slipper chair was reupholstered in a white striped silk. looking. The ceiling was painted a ent, charming and very modern.

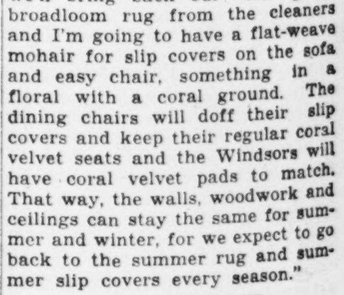
MAYBE YOU can't trip off to the Oazrks or the seashore for a breeze just like that, but don't let that stand in the way of you and comfort for the summer months.

Mary T., one of our readers, has the right idea about that. She writes: "We don't have money to burn, but we were determined to make our home as attractive as possible during the summer. I selected the dining room for most of the improvements, because it's the coolest room in the house. We've had a double window expanded into a French door, so we can open the room right into the garden; not such a fancy garden, to tell the truth, but pretty in a tangled overgrown way. Our dining room furniture is colonial mahogany—new, and we're very proud of it. The room itself is large, with space enough for an old sofa and two mahogany Windsor rockers and an easy chair, besides the dining furniture. We're keeping these because they add such a lot of comfort to the room, but everything had to be freshened.

"The walls were done over in white with light green woodwork and a very pale yellow ceiling. Then we got a green summer grass rug for the floor. The chairs in the dining set we slip-covered in yellow rep. It took away the heavy dark effect of the furniture. The sofa and easy chair got slip covers, too, a fabric with green leaves on a white ground—washable and completely shrunk, of course. The Windsor rockers have pads of this same cool-looking cotton print. We used pongee dyed yellow for curtains, making them floor length and to draw back and forth on rings. The pongee hangs beautifully and seems so cool, yet it's bright and fresh looking.



"You've no idea how much we enjoy this room during the dogs days . . . it's so simple and seems secluded, yet beautiful. In the fall, we'll bring back our old green broadloom rug from the cleaners and I'm going to have a flat-weave mohair for slip covers on the sofa and easy chair, something in a floral with a coral ground. The dining chairs will doff their slip covers and keep their regular coral velvet seats and the Windsors will have coral velvet pads to match. That way, the walls, woodwork and ceilings can stay the same for summer and winter, for we expect to go back to the summer rug and summer slip covers every season."

Lamp Shade Protectors

To protect the lampshades while the house is closed for the summer or is little used are new transparent covers to fit various sizes and types of shades. These are made of oiled silk and fit over the shades, leaving no portion exposed to the dirt. White and several neutral shades are available.

THE Marry-Go-Round

By Helen Rowland

"IT IS man's inordinate inquisitiveness," says a prominent English scientist, "that is responsible for all the progress of the world." Which, of course, means all the discoveries and inventions, including the North Pole, sox-suspenders and termites.

How then did we women get the reputation for being the over-curious sex—the praying, ever-questioning sex. Eve may have taken the first bite of the apple, but it is a widely-known fact that Adam swallowed the rest of it so greedily that it stuck in his throat.

As far as a woman is concerned, the North Pole, the South Pole and the Equator might have stayed there, forever, and she would never have bothered to look for them. Unless, of course, she suspected that her husband was hanging around one of them, with a blonde.

No little girl ever asked as many questions in a week as a small boy can ask in half an hour. And if you will glance over the curious crowd around an excavation or a demonstrator's window or a taxicab accident, you will find at least 10 men to one woman trying to "see what's going on."

Vegetable Broth

Hollywood has long since grown weary of diet chatter. But just the same the sensible women watch their figures and cling faithfully to certain aids to grace and slimness.

Sylvia Sidney, back in Hollywood to start a new picture, tips the scales at about 109 pounds these days. She exercises a little, eats whatever she wishes and looks marvelous but she doesn't mind telling you that she keeps jars of a clear, strained vegetable broth in her icebox and when she's too tired for a full-sized meal—that's what she substitutes. You can get the recipe almost anywhere. It's a blend of fresh vegetables simmered without any meat stock and most beneficial as a nourishing, pick-me-up potion for spring. It's good hot or cold.

● THE WORLD doesn't change much. A modern girl feels just as the girl of the Gay Nineties felt, that a lot of devoted boy friends are merely circumstantial evidence of her charms; and that the only incontestible proof of her prowess is a husband—living, dead or divorced.

—o-o—

A woman can recall each man that she ever thought she loved, with a different sort of emotion; but a man mentally pours all his past loves together in the same mold, like ice cubes, and tucks them away in the refrigerator of his memory.

—o-o—

MEN AREN'T perfect, women aren't perfect, love isn't perfect and marriage is full of pitfalls and disillusionments; but if you hope to dodge ALL the hazards, why not just give up living and save yourself the effort?

● A POPULAR man may get awfully tired of being mauled, these days; but things have not yet reached the stage where he feels that he ought to slap a girl for kissing him.

NOTHING so quickly destroys a girl's "It" and blots out all her personality as a pose. And a pose is as easy to see through as cellophane and as obvious as a black eye.

Chicken Loaf

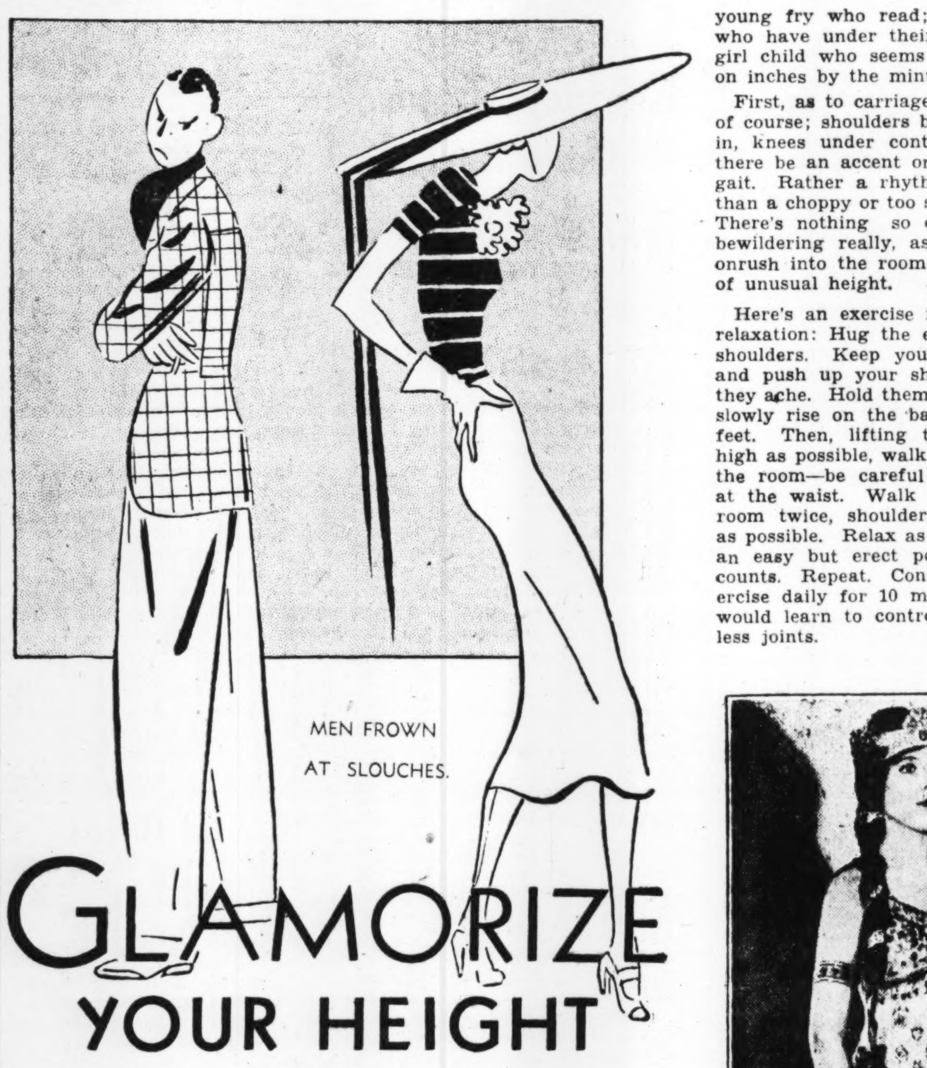
One-half pound canned chicken.
Three-fourth cups soft bread crumbs.
One-half cup milk.
One teaspoon salt.
One-eighth teaspoon pepper.
One and one-half teaspoons minced parsley
One-half teaspoon scraped onion
Three tablespoons melted butter.
Three eggs, well beaten.

Mince chicken. Add bread crumbs to milk ad let stand 15 minutes. Combine chicken, seasonings and melted butter. Add bread crumbs and eggs. Blend well, using a fork. Turn into shallow loaf pan (8" by 4") and place in pan of hot water. Bake in moderate hot oven (350 degree Fahrenheit) one hour or until firm. Remove from oven. Let stand a few minutes. Unmold onto hot platter. Approximate yield: Six portions. Serve with asparagus tops and radishes cut like roses.

Vegetable Broth

Hollywood has long since grown weary of diet chatter. But just the same the sensible women watch their figures and cling faithfully to certain aids to grace and slimness.

Sylvia Sidney, back in Hollywood to start a new picture, tips the scales at about 109 pounds these days. She exercises a little, eats whatever she wishes and looks marvelous but she doesn't mind telling you that she keeps jars of a clear, strained vegetable broth in her icebox and when she's too tired for a full-sized meal—that's what she substitutes. You can get the recipe almost anywhere. It's a blend of fresh vegetables simmered without any meat stock and most beneficial as a nourishing, pick-me-up potion for spring. It's good hot or cold.



MEN FROWN AT SLOUCHES.

GLAMORIZE YOUR HEIGHT

By ALICE WADE ROBINSON

NOTED BEAUTY NEWS AUTHORITY

HAVE you a child or a young sister who suddenly seems to have shot up in the night to an enormous height? That's the problem which beset me when I was 14. It was dreadful, I thought, that I should be so bean-poley. So I slouched—in an effort to disguise the tallness of which I was so suddenly possessed. I wanted to be petite—like my sister and three-fourths of the girls I knew. Height. It was a nightmare. My legs were too long. My arms seemed to extend to the ends of the earth. As for my neck—"Alice in Wonderland" when she'd eaten the magic "growing cake" had nothing on me.

All these adolescent unhappinesses came back to me the other day when I met and talked with Rose Bampton, the new soprano at the Metropolitan Opera House. She's tall, too—five feet ten. She's had a struggle about the height which came to her mushroom-like when she was in the early teens. It was a point in common.

So, knowing that Miss Bampton had had more than ordinary incumbrances to overcome due to her height, I'd ask her how she'd defeated them. First of all, in spite of being over-tall—due to a change in her voice from contralto to soprano—she made her debut this year in the spring opera season as a soprano. You know the ultra femininity of soprano roles—very well. That meant to me that, in spite of the exquisite quality of her voice, something must have happened to Miss Bampton's personality. Something has. It came through hard work against the hazard of tallness. Miss Bampton told me about it—

"I came to realize," she told me, "that being tall could be a help rather than a hindrance. One only had to know how to carry off one's height and to capitalize on it. As a child"—this struck a responsive chord in me—"I carefully cultivated a slouch which I was sure took off a good six inches. In reality, however, it made me look awkward and unattractive. I wanted to sing and I was pretty tall. So I made up my mind—when reason came to me—that I'd make my name as a singer, even though I was much taller than any noted operatic star. I'd make this liability of mine unnoticeable."

And so Miss Bampton has. She now has a statuesque, poised, willowy figure which impresses one with its grace and distinguished bearing.

So, here's some advice to the tall young fry who read; or to those who have under their influence a girl child who seems to have put on inches by the minute.

First, as to carriage: head erect, of course; shoulders back, stomach in, knees under control—and let there be an accent on slowness of gait. Rather a rhythmic carriage than a choppy or too swift a stride. There's nothing so overpowering, bewildering really, as a swooping onrush into the room of a woman of unusual height.

Here's an exercise for ease and relaxation: Hug the ears with the shoulders. Keep your head erect and push up your shoulders until they ache. Hold them there as you slowly rise on the balls of your feet. Then, lifting the knees as high as possible, walk slowly about the room—be careful not to bend at the waist. Walk around the room twice, shoulders lifted high as possible. Relax as you stand in an easy but erect posture for 10 counts. Repeat. Continue this exercise daily for 10 minutes if you would learn to control those restless joints.

CALLING ALL DOGS -:- -:- -:- By Albert Payson Terhune

I SAID, in this series, that the average dog pays no attention at all to his image in a looking glass. A dog may perhaps glance at his reflection, for an instant. But practically never does he pay more heed to it.

E. S. of Dorchester, Mass., writes me his bull terrier goes into noisy fits of temper when he sees himself in the glass, and tries to bite the mirrored canine. E. S. asks me the reason for this. And I must make the same reply I am forced to make too often to your queries: "I don't know!" I have heard of only one other such case in all my long study of dog nature.

As I told you, a dog does his recognizing and his identifying chiefly by means of his nose, just as you employ your sense of sight. He trusts first of all to his scenting powers. Next, to his keen hearing. Last and least of all, he relies on his near-sighted vision. His eyes tell him another dog is facing him in the looking glass. His nose and ears tell him no dog is there. He believes his nose and ears, not his untrustworthy eyes. Perhaps E.

S.'s bull terrier has better eyes or poorer sense of smell and of hearing than has the average dog. That is only a guess. Who can suggest a better reason?

—o-o—

IN THE PAST MONTH I have had 19 letters from readers telling me of pet dogs that are ill-treated or neglected, and begging me to write something protesting against it. But a dog owner who treats his four-legged chum in that way is usually beyond the reach of appeal. That is the tragedy of it.

People write me of dogs kept cooped up in dark and damp cellars; of dogs fastened by short chains to leaky kennels, with no exercise; of dogs confined always in crampingly small wire yards where they can see nothing outside; of dogs which get kicks and curses and too little food and a scarcity of drinking water; of dogs robbed of their needful gallops and romps and human companionship; of dogs confined in stuffy flats, with a 10-minute walk now and then; of dogs even worse treated.

What can I do or say? The local S. P. C. A. or the Humane Society is always ready to intervene, on request, to lighten the worst of these causes—and thus to start a neighborhood feud, if the owner finds out who complained. For the rest, unless the heart or decency of the owner can be touched, there is no remedy for the woes of these animals which love us and which yearn for our friendship and which we deliberately or carelessly kill by slow torture. God help them!

BEAUTY TIPS FOR TALL GIRLS

LET the small girls be gushing. That role's not yours. Cuteness is out, too. Serenity, good humor and grace are your El Dorado.

—o-o—

AS FOR sitting at ease: Sit on the chair rather than the chair-edge; your legs are long, so knee-crossing detracts from grace; as for slouching with feet outstretched—

—o-o—

KEEP healthy with sensible exercise. Ride, swim, hike, play golf. Your body must be symmetrically proportioned in order to carry rightly your large frame.

—o-o—

EVERYTHING about you must reveal meticulousness of bodily care: Your hair, your hands, must be beautifully groomed always. Tall women seem to have inherent grace with their hands. Use yours unself-consciously but well.

—o-o—

AS FOR your feet: Wear shoes with low heels both for day and evening wear. The shops are full of smart new models just now.

—o-o—

INDOLENCE is unbecoming always, but in the tall it's worse than that.

—o-o—

MOVE lightly, not liltingly, but lightly. Think lightly, too. That helps.

—o-o—

WATCH your weight—you know as well as I do that an overweight tall woman is as conspicuous as a lance-thin one.

THE old-fashioned suitcase with shoes packed at either side and dresses wedged between them has no place in the 1937 scheme of travel equipment. Now all apparel hangs as neatly as it does at home and every small article from a sandal to jar of cold cream has its own satchel or compartment.

When packing for her summer vacation the feminine traveler uses as systematic a plan as she does in schedules and routings. The luggage she requires depends both on the length of her trip and the number of stopovers. Some women now confine their luggage to a large case which is equipped with hangers and to an overnight bag. The size of the case may vary from that of hatbox proportions to the one that resembles a Pullman trunk and barely slips under a Pullman berth. As for the overnight bag, it is equipped either with toilet articles and cosmetic compartments or contains extra cases to hold all of the modern toilet requisites.

Other women prefer to divide their belongings into definite classifications and carry sufficient bags to hold each group. This means that dresses and other costumes which will crush are placed into one of those flat, linen carry-alls that many men have found satisfactory to carry an extra suit; knotted things and tweeds go into a soft bag while footwear, cosmetics and all of the other gadgets have their separate containers. The porters aren't especially fond of this latter system but neither are they pleased to carry a full-sized trunk unless the tip is worth the effort.

Redingotes Popular

The redingote versus the short jacket offers a challenge in summer fashions. A year ago a woman wouldn't have been without a little fitted jacket to wear over her gay prints and dark linens. Now she is likely to vary her costume with a washable or sheer crepe redingote.

These full length fitted coats are so versatile that one which is made of linen or pique can be put into service with a morning play suit and continue through the evening. The sheer crepe models can't offer this same amount of service but they make up for it with a maximum of chic.

"Leave Room To Gain Relief From Snoring"

"It's the Only Effective Treatment For the Real Sufferer."

By

Logan Clendening, M. D.

THIS department has received a number of letters from time to time in the past on the subject of snoring. People have wanted to know what is the cause of it, what it denotes, but especially they have wanted to know how to stop it and why the snorer doesn't wake himself up.

We have hesitated to commit ourselves on the subject because our ideas have been so vague, but at long last, as Edward VIII said, the Journal of the American Medical Association has come forward with some remarks which we take the liberty of abstracting as being from an official source:

"Snoring or unusual noises accompanying inspiration or expiration or both in deep sleep, in coma or in deep anesthesia, involve several factors." The noises are produced by the passage of air through regions of partial obstruction to the passage of air.

THESE REGIONS ARE, first, in the glottis or voice box, due to the extreme relaxation of the muscles controlling the vocal cords. This allows the vocal cords to hang into the voice box cavity close together, and to be vibrated with the passage of air breathed in and out. The second obstruction is due to the tongue falling into the back of the throat in coma or anesthesia, especially when the patient is lying on his back. Third, the relaxation of the muscles which govern the position of the soft palate which tends to fall against the roof of the hard palate. This would interfere with the passage of the air through the nose if the patient lies on his back. Fourth is the presence of mucus in the nasal passages.

A common explanation of snoring is that it is due to the vibration of the soft palate, but this is probably not an entirely adequate explanation, because if the soft palate is completely relaxed and the sleeper lies on his back, the palate is likely to close the passage of the nose and not vibrate at all, but merely force air through the lips. Anyone can voluntarily produce snoring noises when awake by making a deep inspiration with a partially closed glottis. The noise is made by the intermittent passage of air through the obstructed glottis.

THESE IDEAS certainly explain the well-known fact that a sleeper is more likely to snore when on his back. The mucus idea also explains that horrible moment when sounds resembling the prelude to the eruption of Vesuvius are followed by snortings, hawkings, gargling and strainings, until finally the offending liquid is removed or swallowed. It does not explain why the snorer doesn't wake himself up. Nobody on earth has been ingenious enough to bring forward any idea on that subject.

Under the question of treatment the American Medical Association is not very satisfactory. It says: "Snoring is an annoyance to other people rather than to the snorer." This is no news. Snoring is not even classed as a functional pathological condition. "Snoring is less liable to occur if the person goes to sleep and stays asleep on either side or on the abdomen. A thorough clearing of the nasal passages before going to sleep also may aid." In other words, the only treatment for the real sufferer from snoring is to go into the other room.

We have had one letter from a distracted wife who wanted to know whether cutting out her husband's soft palate entirely would help any. She said it wasn't really cruelty that prompted her to this course, because she thought if he didn't have it cut out, he was going to blow it out pretty soon himself.

Berkshire Veal Pastry

One-fourth pound suet.
One-half cup lard, or other shortening.
Three cups sifted flour.
One cup ice water.
Three boiled potatoes.
Three onions, sliced.
One-half pound canned veal loaf.
Salt.
Pepper.
One-third cup cold water.

Put suet through grinder. Cut lard into flour. Rub in suet. Add ice water, a small amount at a time, pressing it into the fat-flour mixture until a dough is formed. Wrap dough in waxed paper. Chill for 15 minutes. Roll thin on lightly floured board. Cut into six-inch squares. Place half a sliced potato, half a sliced onion and some cubed veal on each square. Season. Fold square over, forming triangles. Press edges of dough together. Make a little hole in the top. Pour one tablespoon water in each pastry. Bake in hot oven (450 degrees F.) 20 minutes or until brown. Serve hot or cold. Approximate yield: six large pastries.

When Should Girl Begin to Use Make-up?

This Question Must Be Handled Intelligently by Parents.

By Helen Jameson

DAUGHTER, aged 15, appeared at the dinner table with lips tinted a bright vermillion. Father gave her a scowling survey, started to rage. Talked about face paint, which dated him all right, since synthetic complexion coloring isn't called that any more. He lost his temper, handed out the old line beginning with "No child of mine!" It was a dreadful scene. Nobody ate any dinner, everybody felt wretched. Everybody except father realized that he had made a silly of himself.

Not that mother or the older children approved of Miss Fifteen's use of lipstick. With her round little face, she looked rather ridiculous. But that was no way to tackle the problem. At that moment Miss Fifteen hated her father. She felt vindictive. She'd get even with him. You'd see.

—o-o—

AFTER FATHER had settled down to his newspaper and pipe, mother said to daughter, "Come, honey, to my room. Let's talk it over. Father doesn't understand about those things. I do. It's not long ago that I was your age. I haven't forgotten. I know exactly how you feel. When I was 12 I wore a face veil to school. They were fashionable. I realize now that I must have looked silly. But it was what I wanted to do more than anything else in the world."

"You're a darling," said the daughter. "Men are so dumb." The mother thought it rather sad she should have made that discovery so early in life. She said, "In some ways, dear. Only in some ways. They're really quite smart in their own lines."

They talked over the question of makeup and came to these conclusions:

That daughter should have a box of that lovely fragrant powder that mother used and a bottle of perfume of the same scent. A nice little present to a sweet child. Also she could have some bath salts that are such fun to play with, and toilet soap in the form of flowers.

For those gifts daughter should forego the use of rouge, which isn't fashionable any more anyway. Mother had found a compact in daughter's room; suspected it was being used on the sly.

—o-o—

DAUGHTER should have a lipstick, but of such a natural tint that even daddy couldn't spot it. She must learn to put it on evenly and neatly. And when she went to evening parties, she could use a tone slightly brighter. Yes, mother knew that all the girls used them. She has eyes in her head.

And while on the subject of good looks, thought it might be a good plan for daughter to give her hair better attention. Not in arrangement—that was charming—but in brushing and grooming. There was a good-night kiss; and "That's another that," said mother as she turned out the light.

Wan Makeup Vogue

ADVOCATES of the Pan-American vogue in complexions are having an easier time of it than the followers of the English peaches-and-cream trend now that the summer sun has become so unrelenting, but both have hit a snag of competition from a third group of extremists who look as wan and world-weary as make-up allows.

The expression of boredom which accompanies the third type of complexion may be attained even though cheeks are dark but it is difficult to achieve when once the sun has provided a warm healthy glow to the cheeks. Rouge, of course, is completely ignored while lipstick and eye shadow are of the darkest shade obtainable.

Transparent Cases

Transparent cases of various sizes ranging from a tiny one to carry a powder puff to one sufficiently large for an evening frock are among the new contrivances for summer travelers. These are of the envelope type, often bound with contrasting tapes and intended to keep articles immaculate in the traveling case as well as to help the owner find them in a hurry.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

NEW YORK, June 26.

THE casual visitor this summer is likely to regard our struggling metropolis as a sort of Hollywood without palms and Garbo. For the first time in the town's history, 80 per cent of the sizzling citizenry are wearing smoked glasses—heretofore considered strictly a Hollywood and Miami disease.

I and my cynical ilk used to sneer at Gothamites who affected the dark lenses. Well I remember the evening I attended a prize fight and found a dozen half-witted chorus girls wearing such cheaters—and hoping that someone would mistake them for Sylvia Sidney. Naturally, no one did. But the blight remained and festered.

This summer the thing is commonplace, and justified, and with one of those blinding flashes of acuteness which strike even newspaper reporters at times, I have suddenly become aware of the reason. Snow-blindness is a widely known medical phenomenon, and while we here can lay no claim to such a happy form, we can boast of what, to coin a scientific term, should be known as Indiana-Limestone Blindness. In short, the rays of Old Sol (there's another nifty!), bouncing off our buildings and our sidewalks, are simply unbearable to the optics.

—o-o—

There is, now and here, a disease as a result. The only reason our people have never before assumed dark cheaters is because they didn't want to be conspicuous. The hall-mark of the true New Yorker is anonymity. But now good sense has conquered. We wear dark glasses and don't give a rootin' toot whether people think we are imitating Marlene Dietrich or not. So when you drop in this summer, the tenth person wearing colored cheaters will, I dare to presume, be yours faithfully.

—o-o—

● I'M SORRY to have to report that the Broadway scene, this summer, is even more dismal than we anticipated. The list of shows has shrunk to a mere dozen, with only one musical show in the lot—which should be bad news for Pop. Incidentally, the cattiest and cutest show in the list, "The Women," has just staged its 200th performance, and will run out the year without a sign of a puff. Clare Boothe's opus still attracts huge hordes—and it should. I hate it, and so will you; but it's a knockout. Incidentally, Betty Lawford, who is the worst beast of the lot in the show, and Ted Husing, the radio announcer, are enjoying one of the most torrid romances of the year. I should not be surprised in the least to hear their wedding bells toll at any given moment. . . .

HAUNTING THE DOCKS as I do, for business and fun, I saw the happiest married couple in show business head out for a European holiday this week. I mean the handsome Melvyn Douglas, of stage and screen, and his superb spouse, Helen Gahagan, of ditto. She also sings. And the strangest thing about this is that our town knows her only as an actress, while San Francisco and the old world have heard her warble. Helen is holding out on New York! . . .

—o-o—

I've forgotten to mention that one of the nicest things brought back from our swift jaunt to Santa Fe, N. M., was the recipe for the richest, tastiest cocktail-spread of the past few years. Clare Elliott, the advertising girl, has the story for this "Huocamole," which sounds like "wakkamoly." Minced avocados and whip 'em up. Add vinegar, chopped onions, chives and Worcestershire sauce at discretion. Put that on crackers and your guests will go goofy with pleasure. And if they eat enough, they will also be slightly ill.

● THE OTHER DAY I went out to our beautiful Briarcliff Lodge, a summer hotel not too far from town, and saw a pretty sight. As the feature of the swimming pool events, Ethelda Bleibtrey, former Olympic tank champion, and her little 8-year-old daughter Leila—a wondrous minnow—did an act together from the springboard.

—o-o—

EDNA FERBER, who hasn't been writing enough pieces lately to satisfy her admirers, tells me that at last she's lined up enough stories to make a book. It will be out in the fall, and will be called "Trees Die at the Top," taking its title from the first yarn.

—o-o—

WHO SHOULD turn up in our palpitating midst but Evelyn Nesbit, ex-Thaw, singing away at our Wivel Restaurant after a trial whirl in small out-of-town spots! Evelyn, who 31 years ago was one of the central figures in the historic Thaw case, is still a remarkably handsome woman, full of ginger and gallantry.

—o-o—

● NOTHING INTERESTS us more, I suppose, than the handbag situation — what with all the appalling junk we have to lug about these days. I've just seen the grandest in history—a line made in Milan, Italy, and now on the counters of a great Fifth Avenue shop. All are in soft calf save one of hazel lambskin. They are handsome, commodious and beautifully lined, and if they didn't cost so darned much I'd give in and buy them for the lot of you. They come high—but they're worth it.

Exploding Myth About BACHELORS

He Seldom Has the Gay Time That Other Persons Believe Is His Usual Lot in Life

By GEORGE JEAN NATHAN

ONE of the many things that amuses the bachelor is the prevalent and apparently irrevocable idea, entertained chiefly by very young girls and the older married folk, that he is always having a hell of a gay time.

The circumstance that the idea in point is encouraged by the vainer idiots among bachelors themselves only adds to the diversion of the more realistic and self-analytical bachelor.

As a member of the latter order in long and at least comparatively honorable standing, I take the liberty of dispelling several of the more popular misconceptions.

"YOU MUST LISTEN TO THE SAME OLD ROUTINE FEMININE CHATTER."

The first of these is that it must be wonderful not to be tied down to any one woman and with the field constantly to choose from. On the joys of connubial bliss I am, of course, unqualified to speak, but on the theoretically superior and overwhelming joy of being free to keep company with a plurality of women I would like to say a few words.

Out of every 100 women of all ages and conditions whom a bachelor meets, he is lucky if he can find one of sufficient charm, intelligence and loveliness to interest him in the slightest. That is, for any length of time and supposing him to be moderately intelligent and of any experience and accuracy of taste.

More bachelors spend evenings alone at home, or at their clubs, or having dinner with other lonely bachelors than the generality of legend lovers imagine, and it isn't always because they want to. It is because, against their will, they do it rather than sit around with nine-tenths of the women available to them and listen to the same old routine feminine chatter on all the same old routine subjects from society and the novels of D. H. Lawrence on the one hand to the ineffable delights of skiing and the deep problem dramas of Noel Coward on the other, not forgetting how come such a charming and interesting man as oneself (that is, if one has ordered eight dollars' worth of caviar and a bottle of vintage Bollinger and has brushed one's hair that day) has never married, but how wonderful it must be anyway not to be tied down to any one woman.

A second misconception is the bachelor's enormous popularity with hostesses, it apparently being the theory that, simply because one happens to be a bachelor, hostesses constantly fall all over themselves in a mad scramble for one's company.

That bachelors, by virtue of their estate, are relatively easy and available prey for hostesses seeking to fill out dinner tables, dance floors and the attentions of the more silly, voluble and neglected dowagers is not to be denied. But that any hostess of experience doesn't in turn know from that experience that a bachelor is something of a problem and maybe even an instrument of disconcerting pain is to be denied only by those whom the aforesaid hostess has never taken into her confidence.

A BACHELOR ENCOUNTERS MANY WOMEN HE DOESN'T CARE TO MEET.

The trouble with bachelors in this respect is threefold. In the first place, they usually seem to have mysterious engagements of one sort or another, not always entirely mythical, which remove them from the party at least an hour or two before the hostess has reckoned, thus leaving a number of extra women seated forlornly in corners with no one to talk to and with the hostess herself, to her distress, compelled to weary herself being solicitous about them.

In the second place, the bachelor is more inclined to be quickly bored than the non-bachelor, and is hence a further concern to his hostess. The reasons for the bachelor's relative ennui are several. Whereas a married man finds diversion in mingling for a change with women other than his wife, the bachelor, to whom such mingling is a commonplace event, finds neither novelty nor any particular excitement in it. Again, whereas a married man has from long training in the art made himself adaptable to formality, and as a matter of fact secretly likes it, the bachelor finds it rather uncomfortable and tedious and prefers his own somewhat looser punctilio.

IN the third and final place, the bachelor is above all usually an irritatingly selfish fish and demands twice as much attention from a hostess as a married man. He feels, doodle that he essentially is, that he is doing his hostess a favor by the mere act of contributing his presence and he expects it to be appreciated.

This is especially true if he falls into the social category of the "extra man," that is, the bachelor equivalent of military reinforcements, the fellow who is called upon at the last moment to fill in the dinner chair next to some particularly dull female (the aforesaid chair having been deserted, also at the last moment, by some independent and assertive bachelor), to sit through a show he has already been summoned to sit through at least five times, or to attempt to loosen up some visiting duchess' joints sufficiently to persuade the onlookers that it is a rhumba and not a minuet that is being danced.

A FURTHER popular misconception is that a bachelor is extremely fortunate in being able to go home late at night, lock himself in from outside bothers, be alone with himself, and meditate quietly to his heart's content. Anyone who believes that doesn't know the truth by half.

The telephone companies' records will attest to the fact that most of the peremptory requests for changes of 'phone numbers come regularly from bachelors. The bachelor who, when he gets home at night, finds peace and quiet is largely a product of others' romantic imagination.

If he isn't awakened by telephone calls of all varieties, he is disturbed by all kinds of friends in the shape of visitors and droppers-in who somehow imagine that a bachelor is synonymous with a bartender, a guide to the night-life of the city, a confidential directory of all the great stage beauties since Lily Langtry, a prestidigitator of sandwiches, and a sweet loafer generally.

The biggest laugh that the poor bachelor can evoke on such occasions is to remark that he has to get up early the next morning and work.

The notion that a bachelor is especially blessed by Providence and is a combination William Wycherley, Casanova and recherche maitre d'hotel, with slight overtones of Florenz Ziegfeld, Basil Zaharoff and Moet and Chandon, is shared even by the world's law-makers, who every now and again seek to make him conscious of and pay for his theoretical great privilege by taxes on bachelors.

A GIRL ABOUT TOWN

the rest of the theater. What a spot, what a spot!

—o-o—

YOU'LL HAVE to add this to life's most embarrassing moments—this story that was relayed to us from a reliable source.

A young "live alone" business woman who always eats breakfast on week days in a busy downtown cafeteria has an especial fondness for cinnamon rolls, and her usual breakfast consists of two of these rolls and a cup of coffee. She cut out the rolls a week or so ago, however, when she discovered she was getting a bit overweight.

While having her cup of coffee the other morning, a strange young man sat down across the table from her. He had two fresh, enticing cinnamon rolls. One look at the rolls, and she was torn between Diet and Desire. While the battle was still being fought, the young man arose from the table, LEAVING ONE ROLL.

You have perhaps already guessed what happened—up to a point. Yes, obeying that perverse impulse that sometimes strikes the strongest, she reached out and picked up the roll. But, you hadn't guessed this—lo! and a couple of beholds, after she had taken one bite she looked up, and here came the young man back again. Horrors! He had merely gone after another cup of coffee.

She tried to explain, but the words just wouldn't come. The young man looked at her in a kindly way, waved his hand, and said, "Oh, that's all right." After a minute or two he left the table.

The poor girl felt that every eye in the place was on her—that they were all just waiting for her to depart so they could laugh out loud. She took several minutes to try to compose herself, then marched that endless journey to the cashier's cage to pay her check.

And there, kind friends, she received the final thrust, the blow that killed her with embarrassment.

"Are you the young lady who was at that table right back there?" asked the cashier with a glance of ill-concealed pity reserved by one in her high position for the deserving poor. "You are?" "That's perfectly all right. The young man at your table paid your check."

Children Need Kindness From Their Parents

Words of Praise Bring Sense of Power to Growing Child.

By Angelo Patri

MOST people talk enough and to spare, but there are few people who talk at the right time and say what is best to say. Especially parents. These good people are so chary of good words to the children they are closest to, so reserved in the expression of the opinions and feelings, when these feelings are kindly and sympathetic, that the children know them mainly as Authority with a loud voice.

Children need to feel confident in the presence of their parents and teachers. They need to feel the ease of mind and body that comes to them only when they are sure of those in authority over them. Any uncertainty of that sort will make a child unsure in his thinking and behavior, and that cannot result in good work.

When a child gets a word of praise, when he feels kindness in your touch and in your voice, when he learns to count on you for support and understanding in moments of tribulation, he has within him a sense of power that tells him he can go ahead and do anything he wants to do without fear. That feeling brings success.

A HAPPY CHILD does everything he has to do with a flourish. He has more than enough energy; he has a mind free to work as it wills; he has a direct and open road to his goal. All that he experiences on the way is in his favor. He succeeds far more often than he fails, and when he falls short he is not discouraged because he is not afraid. The knowledge of the friendly attitudes of those closest to him sustains him and drives him on.

It is easy to make a child happy. All that is needed is the feeling in your heart that you like him and wish him well. That feeling will shine through your speech, your action, your touch. It will shine through the least expression of your relationship to him and make him feel warmed and cherished. Your warm liking, your good wishes, become his greatest source of power.

If you think a child looks well, tell him so. It will do a girl a lot of good to know that you think she looks like a million dollars. Tell her, "Well, young lady, they're going to know somebody's coming when you step out this morning. You're a sight for sore eyes with that color in your face and that saucy hat on your head. Pity the boys today." The light and laughter such a speech will bring to the girl's spirit will last all day and carry her over many a difficult place.

WHEN YOU SEE a boy doing his level best, even if he isn't doing a whale of a lot in the way of high marks, tell him so. "You're all right, son. Anybody that digs along as you're doing is bound to get there with colors flying. You're all right." The thought that you felt that way about him lifts tons off his spirit, and he is bound to get there.

Whenever you have a fine or a happy thought about a child, tell him. Skip a few of the lectures and cheer for the good points even if you do have to search hard to find them. They are going to be easier to find once you break down the barriers of reserve and let the child know you're for him one hundred per cent. Childhood and adolescence are lonely enough, difficult enough to try the souls of the young ones. Give them a lift. Tell them what is in your heart, and ever after there will be two of you going forward hand in hand, shoulder to shoulder, and two of you will glow with success and happiness.

Crinkled Crepes

Although the sleek black fabrics are the ones destined to receive first promotion for frocks which look like they belong to the autumn rather than to summer, novelty crinkled crepes and clocky weaves are considered of fashion significance for the coming season. These rough surfaced materials look best in bright shades so are to be introduced in such striking tones as magenta red, rust and the new purplish hues.

Romper Play Suit

The romper style of play suit which was introduced for women didn't create much enthusiasm but girls who are starting off to camp are including the suits in their wardrobes. Blue denim and other practical cottons of the "uniform" type are the favorites and are being worn by the 10 and 12 years old fashionables for bicycling as well as for general play needs.

Ankle Bracelets And Sun Goggles Odd Companions

AN ankle bracelet and a pair of two-tone sun goggles may seem like odd companions on a summer day but more than one smartly-dressed woman has adopted these two accessories. The anklets and the bright glasses are both in vogue this summer so it's difficult to keep them apart.

Dashing through a downtown shop on a recent day was one of St. Louis' snappiest dressers in a black shirtwaist frock and jacket, an off-the-face hat of black and white, heavy rimmed sun glasses repeating this same two-toned theme, toeless high-heeled sandals and a platinum chain circling one slender, sheer stockinged ankle.

Paris, New York City and Hollywood have adopted the odd combination of accessories so St. Louis need not be too startled!

Leases Taken For Centers Of Television

By H. H. Niemeyer

HOLLYWOOD, June 26.

WE were talking, last Sunday in these columns, about the experiments and tests being made out here in Hollywood with television, which is really much nearer than most people imagine. Has been ready for launching on a big scale for a year or so, as a matter of fact, but the powers that be in the electrical world have been holding it back because of their tremendous investments, by way of huge loans and great amounts due them from the studios on talking picture equipment. Now, however, things are reaching the boiling point. The big radio chains all have taken long leases on Hollywood or Los Angeles theaters from where the present radio programs are being broadcast. New buildings are going up for broadcasting purposes, too, and they are all being built, not with glassed-in sound rooms but with regular and fully equipped stages, on which scenery can be set up and plays given just as you have been used to seeing things of that sort done.

In connection with this work it might be mentioned that William C. DeMille is back in Hollywood. William, brother of Cecil, was one of the great—far greater than his better publicized brother, a lot of people thought—producers in the early non-talking days of the cinemas. By the time sound pictures rolled around he had made, and saved, all the money he wanted and retired to New York to dabble in his first love, playwriting. But television has interested him. He has long been deep in the study of the new-fangled coming art and when plays are sent through the air so you can see them William DeMille will be one of the pioneers.

He was one of the early—but not earliest—pioneers of the movies, too, although he refused to invest or take part in the forming of the original Famous Players Company, a combination made up of Jesse Lasky, Sam Goldwyn and Cecil DeMille. When Cecil started for California with that outfit, William remarked to his brother, "I'll stay home and save my money to pay your carfare back." Cecil never needed to borrow the fare. He stuck to films from the very beginning and made one of the greatest fortunes in Hollywood. William struck out for the West a little later and got rich, too, although he falls a good many millions short of matching the dollars garnered by his brother. One of the first tasks out here, now that he is back, will be to appear on one of the national broadcast programs being conducted for a soap company by Cecil—for C. B. got into the radio business with a decided eye in the direction of television.

CECIL B. DeMILLE, believing thoroughly that publicity paid, has always been hailed as the playwriting member of the family. He did write some good plays, too, but it was usually in combination with his more retiring brother. "William has a finer mind than mine," says Cecil, "and a better trained one. If I see something I want to get to, I'll squirm, crawl, leap or pole vault to reach it. Bill, on the other hand will only do things in a way which will permit him to act as a gentleman and a civilized person."

So William has been studying the television matter from the technical standpoint. Cecil has been preparing for The Day by something as close to actual experience as he is able to get at this time.

It was William who wrote the stage version of "The Warrens of Virginia," a good many years ago. It was a very successful play and in it, as a promising young juvenile, appeared Cecil B. and a little girl named Gladys Smith, who was making her bow to New York audiences. Gladys grew up to become Mary Pickford, who is getting married today to Buddy Rogers, who, just a few years ago, played a master of ceremonies and blew a horn or trombone or something at the Ambassador Theater in St. Louis.

A lot of people imagine that Mary Pickford, nee Gladys Smith, is almost entirely a movie-trained person. As a matter of fact she began acting, on the so-called legitimate stage, when she was 5 years old, with the Valentine Stock company in Toronto. That was in 1898. She stuck with that organization for eight years, appearing as Eva in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and all the usual child parts of the time. In 1902 she was the Valentine company's Shirley Temple, being starred in that stirring meller, "The Fatal Wedding." She went on a road tour with Chauncey Olcott in "Edmund Burke" in 1906, but she did not reach New York, by way of "The Warrens of Virginia," until 1907. She did not really attract attention in the cinemas until 1913, when Cecil and William DeMille were already established in the new entertainment game.

Opera Swings to Comedy With 'Louie the 14th'

Ziegfeld Show, Featuring Al Trahan of Vaudeville Fame, to Be Introduced to Forest Park This Week

FLORENZ ZIEGFELD'S "Louie the 14th," which was a great musical comedy success in its day (1925) and which was revived locally in 1929 at the old Garden Theater, on Olive Street road, makes its initial appearance at the Municipal Theater tomorrow evening, as the fourth production of the summer. Jerome Kern's and Oscar Hammerstein II's "Music in the Air" will be heard for the last time this evening.

"Louie the 14th" has nothing whatever to do with the Grand Monarque of French history or his florescent reign, but only with Louis Ketchup, an American doughboy lingering in France after the World War. Called "Louie" because the French pronounce it that way and "the 14th" because he is hired to break the hoodoo of 13 guests at a party by becoming the extra one himself, he has a comic series of adventures that make for two acts of stage entertainment.

These antics and musical lyrics, which served Leon Errol well in the leading role of the original and at the Garden Theater, are the invention of Arthur Wimperis, who got his idea from a German book. Sigmund Romberg, famous composer of "Maytime," "Blossom Time," "The New Moon" and "The Desert Song," wrote the score, which features these numbers: "Little Peach," "Homeland," "My First Love Letter," "The Little Blue Pig," " Regimental Band," "I'm the Major Domo" and "Follow the Rajah."

In the Errol role this week will be Al Trahan, vaudeville comedian whose comic piano act has made him known in every large city in the world, St. Louis included, on various occasions, but who has never appeared in Forest Park. By virtue of command performances before the late King George V of England, Trahan was able for many years to bill himself as "the man who made the King laugh."

He has appeared on Broadway in the "Second Little Show" and Earl Carroll's "Vanities," on the London stage in "Follies to Be Wise" and on the radio. Part of his piano routine has been worked into this week's production, which is the only one in which Trahan is cast.

In the contingent of newcomers to Municipal Opera for "Louie the 14th" are also Margaret Daum, Metropolitan Opera soprano; Wilbur Evans, young concert and operatic baritone; Olive Olsen, stage and screen comedienne; Yukona Cameron, comedienne; the Hudson Wonders, acrobatic team, and Bert Prival, ballet star.

REMAINING principals are Annamary Dickey, Detmar Poppen, Ruth Urban, Lew Parker, Phil Porterfield, Robert Pitkin and Erika Zaranova, Helene Denizon, solo danseuse of last summer, returns to Forest Park with this show.

Miss Daum made her Metropolitan debut in "La Boheme" last month. She has sung with the Civic Light Opera Co., in the presentation of Gilbert and Sullivan works in New York and was for a year a featured artist at the Radio City Music Hall. She was in the musical play, "Revenge With Music," two seasons ago on Broadway and in "Amelia Goes to the Ball," recently produced under the direction of Fritz Reiner in New York and Philadelphia, and is heard each week on a radio chain program.

Evans, winner of an Atwater Kent scholarship award some years ago, was later a scholarship student at the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia, made his operatic debut in 1933 in "Tristan and Isolde," with the Philadelphia Orchestra and has sung in "Faust," "Martha," "Samson and Delilah," "Pagliacci" and other standard operas. He has been soloist with leading symphony orchestras, too, and as part of his qualifications for playing Capt. William Brent in "Louie the 14th" holds a commission in the Marine Corps.

Miss Olsen's stage experience comprises work in "Follow Thru" and the "Vanities" and in "Meet My Sister," West Coast musical offering of last season. Miss Cameron, in private life Mrs. Trahan, has appeared in several shows with her husband.

Prival, featured in several movies, was on tour last year with the Hollywood Ballet. The Hudson Wonders, a sister team, made their latest Broadway appearance in Earl Carroll's "Sketch Book" and have toured abroad.

"Louie the 14th" places an emphasis on dancing and the Municipal Theater will see many ensembles staged under the direction of Al White Jr. White's work has been kept in the background by the nature of the three previous shows this season so that the modern routines he has worked out for this week will offer the first real display of his talents.

Likewise, the five scenes of the show offer an opportunity for scenic display beyond that which Ziegfeld conceived for the indoor theaters in which "Louie the 14th" originally played. A special build-up for the Municipal Theater is to be given the Joan of Arc pageant at the end of Act I.

For its production of the week following "Louie the 14th," Municipal Opera has chosen the Gilbert and Sullivan classic, "The Mikado," a favorite of its repertories of 1919, 1920 and 1927. Ralph Riggs will come to the park as Ko-Ko, Joseph Macaulay, Margaret Daum, Annamary Dickey, Mary Hopple, Eric Mattson and Detmar Poppen will have other important assignments.

Ruth Wilson to Be Little Symphony Soloist on Friday

RUTH WILSON, young American violinist, will be soloist at the second Little Symphony concert in the Washington University Quadrangle, at 8:30 o'clock Friday evening, playing Bach's Violin Concerto in A Minor. Hans Lange will conduct.

Miss Wilson, who was born in California some 23 years ago, has studied with Borisoff, Concertmaster Guidi of the St. Louis Symphony and lately with William Kroll of New York. This will not be her first St. Louis appearance as she was heard in recital at the Sheldon Memorial three years ago. She has since been soloist with the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

The Bach Concerto is a work seldom heard and illustrates the policy of the Little Symphony in presenting works outside routine programs. Typical of the composer's intricate style, his characteristic design, it has also a brilliant lyrical appeal.

The program will open with Haydn's "La Passione" symphony, one of the lesser known of the composer's more than 100 symphonies, and close with the world premiere of Dance in 3-Time by the American composer, Quincy Porter. The "La Passione" symphony is one of Haydn's best works. Records do not show that it has been played anywhere in this country other than by the New York Little Symphony, under baton of Lange, last year.

Porter's works have been attracting much attention. The Dance in 3-Time was commissioned by the Little Symphony through Mrs. C. Powell Fordyce, local music patron and vice-president of the Little Symphony.

Other works on the program will be Ernest Bloch's Concerto Grosso for Strings and Piano, which was introduced locally by E. Fernandez Arbos, Spanish conductor, when he directed the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra eight years ago, and Three Little Symphonies by Darius Milhaud, contemporary French composer. The latter composition is a series of short and witty musical essays.

The complete program:

Symphony in F Minor
"La Passione" — — — — —Haydn
Violin Concerto in A Minor — — —Bach
Concerto Grosso for Strings and Piano— — — — — — —Ernest Bloch
(Leonard Zottarelle at the piano.)
Three Little Symphonies —Darius Milhaud
Dance in Three-Time— — —Quincy Porter

Few 'Mental' Actors in Movies, Director Says

REAL actors and actresses of Hollywood can be counted on the fingers of one hand, according to Director Mitchell Leisen, who says the remainder of the stars are "merely personalities". But Leisen, who is directing "Easy Living" at present, refused to name those he thought were the genuine performers.

"Real acting," he said, "is done with the mind. If an actor thinks as the character he's playing would think under the particular set of circumstances of the scene being taken, the physical part of the performance will take care of itself.

"But there's very little mental acting being done. There are too many 'physical actors' in Hollywood and when they go into a scene all they think of is whether they should read a line with a rising inflection or a falling inflection, whether they should frown at a certain point or merely raise an eyebrow, or whether their hair is in place and makeup all right. They shouldn't be worrying about these things at all if they're really acting mentally as well as physically."

Leisen concedes the value of "physical technique," of course, but only as incidental to "mental acting" and thinks it should "decrease in direct ratio to the distance the actor is from the camera."

Gay Film Trip to the Alps

By Colvin McPherson

A NEW director-writer team gains luminosity in one of the films of the week, and the point will be worth remembering for the future. "I Met Him in Paris," the work of Director Wesley Ruggles and Writer Claude Binyon, as well as Claudette Colbert, Robert Young and Melvyn Douglas, is a comedy of sheer delight. It runs at the Ambassador.

Ruggles, Binyon and Miss Colbert have been associated previously in "The Gilded Lily" and "The Bride Comes Home," but "I Met Him in Paris" goes far beyond these earlier efforts. It may be placed with the smoothest comedies of all seasons.

The work of Ruggles and Binyon does not have the laugh-provoking qualities of the Capra-Riskin films, neither does it have their farcical flavor. "I Met Him in Paris" is many times more believable than "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town." Laughs are frequent, but they are never tossed in at the expense of the story. The next moments of "I Met Him in Paris" are not predictable.

From a story credited to Helen Meinardi, Binyon has worked out a situation in which Miss Colbert, a New York fashion designer, decides to have a long-deferred spree in Paris. There, whilst being annoyed by one of the local mosquitoes in an American bar, she is befriended by a novelist, Young, and a playwright, Douglas, and meets both gentlemen. Young becomes eager first and suggests they go to Switzerland for the week-end. That raises the question on which the comedy is built: Can two intelligent people go to Switzerland for the week-end for the pure fun of it, and no reputations damaged? Miss Colbert and Young think so, Douglas doubts their motives, so goes along as a quite-despised chaperon.

In his own way, however, he has developed an affection for Miss Colbert, so jealousy is his real motive. Young already has a wife, a fact he hestitates to mention, with the result that the complications really complicate. The chief virtue of Binyon's screen play is that the dialogue is always natural, always funny, but never so witty that it glows like a gag-man's gem. Next, wherever possible, Binyon tells his story without dialogue, an exceedingly fine technique for a screen writer.

The players have their share of the honors. Miss Colbert as the bored, then flustered, now annoyed, now romantic, then angry young woman. Young as exuberant youth, with something to hide and something to fight for. Douglas as the hurt, spoiled little boy doggedly trailing after the others. Their straight-from-the-shoulder speeches are delivered with conviction and all with individuality.

Much excitement comes from the winter sports—the skiing, ski-joring, bobsledding and skating. High-grade camera work catches the action, without production resorting more than a few times to process photography. When audiences learn that the snow scenes came from our own little Idaho, all will probably want to route the summer vacation that way.

The second film at the Ambassador would probably inspire Shakespeare, were he alive, to rewrite some of his famous lines after this fashion: "All the world's a cinema, and each man in his time plays Philo Vance." Without going over the serial numbers, it is only necessary to say that Grant Richards, in some slight respects resembling William Powell, does it now and the film, "A Night of Mystery" is a remake of "The Greene Murder Case," which, if I remember, was the daddy-of-'em-all. If you already know who murdered whom, your sport will be in murdering the spectators behind you, who will not remember quite, or quietly. Best performance honors go to Helen Burgess, young lady who plays Ada and who came originally from St. Louis.

Another Dawn.

YUMA, ARIZONA'S desert serves again to depict the European conquest of the world and the little matters of love and such that go therewith, in "Another Dawn," at the Fox. Ian Hunter plays Col. All-Discipline, Kay Francis is Wife and Errol Flynn the Other Man. Kay just can't love Ian, and tells him so before she marries him. Her heavy heart is with that lover who flew away into the sunset and never returned. It's quite poetic, really, at first.

But when Ian and Kay are back in Arabia, and she meets Errol Flynn — oh, my dear! There is somebody to remind you of Someone Else, no matter how many sunsets he flew into. But Errol and Kay are both as noble as Col. Hunter, so they fight and fight against this thing that will destroy them all. It's no use. They just have to suffer until an Arabian rebellion can come along and get rid of the Colonel, thereby making the world safe for romance, or some other Hollywood truism.

Due credit should be given Miss Francis for her wardrobe selections, which are stunning, but otherwise, "Another Dawn" can be offered only as evidence to show that no one in pictures says noble things so unconvincingly as Kay Francis, unless it is Errol Flynn.

"White Bondage," the Fox's drama of misery among the sharecroppers, presumes that the abject condition of these Southern unfortunates is only a matter of short-changing and that if they got honest weight and new scales, everything would be all right. It sets up a dark villain, Joseph King, who keeps two sets of books, tells lies, and for all we know, runs a numbers racket, bootlegs and cuts the ropes on his rivals' trapezes. The violence to fact is somewhat redeemed by performances of Harry Davenport as "Pap" Craig, an elderly sharecropper, and Howard Phillips as Cal Sanders, sullen example of the younger generation.

THE Marx Brothers have found hearty response to their comic carryings-on at Loew's, so stay the second week. Groucho's mission this time is portrayal of a horse doctor at the head of a medical staff, Chico's is that of all-purpose man and Harpo's one of riding the horse in the big race. All three join in saving Maureen O'Sullivan's sanitarium for her and Allan Jones. Jones sings several numbers, and Leonard Ceeley does the kind of energetic comedy job that makes a great part of "Music In the Air" his at Municipal Opera.

The Louis-Braddock fight pictures, added to Loew's program, are not as startling as were those of the Louis-Schmeling bout, but the difference is only the difference in the fights. Photography is good, the knockout punch clearly seen.

Marionette Pictures

Popeye, Mickey Mouse and other heroes of the animated cartoons are facing their most serious threat in years from a villain called the "stop-action" marionette film. But the threat comes from the popular characters' own studios. For some time Paramount and Walt Disney, owners of Popeye and Mickey Mouse, have been developing marionette shows and are about ready to offer them to the public. A test of marionettes will be made in the new musical, "Artist and Models," in which Russell Patterson, illustrator, has a whole marionette show. This is not "stop-action," however, which requires more detailed camera work and which will be attempted later.

Theater Guild Chooses Road For Premiere

Lunt and Fontanne In 'Amphitryon 38' On West Coast

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 26.

BROADWAY, as the capitol lane of the theater, must abandon today its chronic lament of the past 10 years that the road theater is an item of the dusty past. Not only has Billy Rose been exploiting the road with gilded returns, but now the Theater Guild, royal palace of the flesh-and-blood stage, moves clear across the continent for a premiere that was so enthusiastic as to move Alfred Lunt, in his curtain speech on Wednesday night to say that "San Francisco is the city in which to open a play."

Lunt and Lynn Fontanne opened on the West Coast in "Amphitryon 38," a French comedy based on an ancient Greek legend, and eventually in the fall it will be brought to Broadway in the adaptation it has been given by S. N. Behrman, humorously bitter author of "The Second Man" and "Meteor."

Going on to Los Angeles, before returning to Broadway, the Lunts will be preceded by the observation of John Hobart of the San Francisco Chronicle, that this "fantasy about an amorous god and a constant wife is at once ironical satire and compassionate drama."

For this ancient Greek legend has progressed to this stage from its mythical past to the point where it is rewritten by one of the theater's most humorous and satirical writers, Behrman, and acted by the Lunts, a comical and bitter and understanding duo who, like Katharine Cornell and Eva Le Gallienne, remain true to the stage as against the allurements of the cinema studios. It has been, you know, the feeling among actors and playwrights ever since the introduction of talking pictures that the rivalry between stage and screen was practically a case of civil war, although both actors and writers now manage to shift at convenient and profitable moments from one side to the other.

But the Lunts, with the one exception of the time they made a movie of "The Guardsman," have remained true to their work on the stage and to vacations on their Genessee Depot, Wis., farm.

So, ever loyal to the flesh and blood stage, the Lunts invade the very centers of the cinema to present their first performances of this comic story of what happened when Jupiter came tumbling down from his royal throne atop high Olympus to speak words of love to a mortal woman who was determined to be virtuous.

The numerical vagueness of the title is simply explained in that this is the thirty-eighth version of this Amphitryon play which Aeschylus and Sophocles wrote in its first version. At least, this is the thirty-eighth version of the original manuscript, for Behrman does not explain how many times he rewrote his thirty-eighth version. But, he must have produced a perfect job for, as Ada Hanifan, drama editor of the San Francisco Examiner, said about the premiere, the play "is a chariot which Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne have hitched to a brilliant star."

But, it now seems settled that not only have Lunt (husband) and Fontanne (wife) a fine new play, but also that the road theater would do well if other producers follow in the footsteps of the Theater Guild.

MEANWHILE, Broadway itself is finding comfort in a new development of the legitimate theater—air-cooling. And the motion of the past that stage plays are in season only at certain times, like oysters, is about to go the way of many another outworn tradition.

Eleven shows remain and all are demonstrated successes. Business isn't exactly what it should be right now, but once vacationists get to thinking of New York legitimate theaters with as much cooling hope as they do cinema palaces, business will be better. At least, Broadway figures it that way.

Continuing on the boards are "You Can't Take It With You," Pulitzer Prize comedy; "Room Service," George Abbott's $250,000 beauty (movie sale price), two musicals, "The Show Is On" and "Babes in Arms," "Having Wonderful Time," "Excursion," "The Women," "Brother Rat," "Yes, My Darling Daughter," "Tovarich" and, of course, "Tobacco Road," which has survived several summers already.

"Tovarich" holds the honors as the longest run play of the season, having passed the 300 mark. It is one of the latest to take advantage of air-cooling and bids fair to remain on through the summer. In fact, Broadway may see all its present works holding on until cool weather comes of its own accord, and premieres begin again, on home territory.

Improved Automatic Tuning in New Philcos.

New 1938 Philco radio sets were introduced at a largely attended dealer luncheon meeting Friday held by the Artophone Corporation, the distributor, at Hotel Jefferson. Among those presenting the new models and the advertising and merchandising plans for the coming year were Sayre Ramsdall, vice-president of the Philco Radio and Television Corporation, Philadelphia; T. A. Kennally, national Philco sales manager, and Jack Leahy division manager.

Improved fast automatic tuning of pre-selected stations is featured in seven new "Double X" models with six to 15 tube chassis. All of these have inclined control panels for tuning convenience. Automatic tuning is also used in two chair-side Philcos and in a table model that can be placed on a book shelf or mantel.

In the line are 21 battery operated sets, including 2-volt, 6-volt, or 100-volt, in table and console types.

The table models come in numerous chassis and cabinet designs, one of them having an 11-tube chassis.

High fidelity is incorporated in the larger models as is the Philco inclined sounding board, while the Philco foreign tuning system is continued with improvements. Oversize speakers, push pull audio in the larger sets, illuminated full-vision dials, tone control and automatic volume control are among other features, as well as extra shielding, a built-in filter to ward out line interference and a balanced superheterodyne circuit. Shadow tuning is continued on many models.

The largest of the new sets is the 890-XX, which has 20 tubes, "super-high fidelity" reproduction, three speakers, acoustic clarifiers, music interpretation, a special audio system and continuously variable bass control. The 15-tube 116XX has all these features, but has one high fidelity speaker.

New Sparton Sets Introduced in St. Louis.

A complete line of new 1938 Sparton radio sets was shown to dealers Thursday and Friday at the Mayflower Sales Co., distributer, with Gene Strauss, manager of the firm's radio division, in charge of the display.

Featured in the new 10, 12 and 15 tube models, is a "selectonne" automatic, push-button tuning of pre-selected stations. Pressing one of the buttons brings in the wanted station instantly, tuned to resonance for best quality. There are no moving parts in the device—no motor, no cams, no complications. It operates as quickly and simply as a door bell. As many as six stations may be pre-selected. Other stations can be tuned in the ordinary way.

Models in the new Sparton line range from three-band table sets of various designs, including one in glass, up to 15-tube sets. They include farm radios which require only a single six-volt battery. Tone control, automatic volume control and high-fidelity control on the larger sets are standard features.

Radio-phonograph combination models range up to one embodying a 12-tube radio set, an automatic record changer which handles eight 10-inch or 12-inch records, special audio amplifier and fidelity dynamic speaker. The 15-tube radio sets have 18-inch dynamic, wide-range speakers.

New Emerson Sets Shown to Dealers.

New Emerson radio sets, ranging from four to 15 tube models, were displayed for dealers the past week by the Mayflower Sales Co., the distributer.

A feature of the 1938 sets is a "tone chamber," which is designed to equalize the high and low reproduction by the speaker so that all tones may be heard in proper proportion. There are several armchair models in the line, as well as table models and consoles for each type of chassis. In addition, there are Emerson two-volt and six-volt battery sets, and a six-volt set that is convertible for 32-volt operation, and two auto radios.

There are also phonograph-radio combinations of both arm-chair and table types, with high-fidelity crystal pick-ups. One six-tube model has automatic tuning whereby 10 pre-selected stations can be tuned with a flip of the finger.

Full range volume expansion with a "symphonizer," to restore to broadcast music the volume range that has been limited by the station engineers, is featured in the larger models. There is also a full-scale compensated volume control to hold up the deeper notes when volume is reduced.

Many Changes Go Into Effect For the Summer

Jack Benny, Fred Allen, Al Jolson, Joe Cook, Grace Moore, Lanny Ross, Bing Crosby, Jack Pearl Leaving Air.

CHANGES in the featured performers on programs, and departures of others for long-term vacations, are possibly more numerous than in any previous period in broadcasting. Eddie Cantor has been off the air for three weeks. Ed East and Ralph Dumke, the one-time Sisters of the Skillet, also are through for the warm weather, and the former will sail soon for a summer in Paris. Kate Smith concluded her series last Thursday; Jack Pearl, Friday; Joe Cook and Grace Moore, last night, as did Arthur Allen and Parker Fennelly their Snow Village Sketches. Miss Smith's programs will be continued by an orchestra and entertainers. Igor Gorin, the baritone, and Ella Logan, the Scotch singer, are carrying on for Cantor, and Tommy Dorsey and his orchestra and Edythe Wright, the singer, for Pearl. Jack Oakie, Ray Sinatra and Victor Moore and Helen Broderick are through for the time being.

Jack Benny's final broadcast will be at 5 o'clock this afternoon on KSD. Next Sunday he will be succeeded for the summer by Jane Froman and Don Ross. Joe Penner, Bob Ripley and Phil Baker also will start vacations after today. Harry von Zell, the announcer-comedian, will take over for Baker. Ripley's program will be continued by Werner Jannsen, his orchestra and chorus, Janssen transferring from the W. C. Fields-Don Ameche show on which Robert Armbruster will be the musical director on and after today.

Al Jolson will go off the air after Tuesday for nine weeks. Fred Allen and Portland Hoffa will make their final Town Hall appearance Wednesday and the following week will be succeeded by Walter O'Keefe. Bing Crosby will leave the air after Thursday night, turning over the master of ceremonies job on KSD's 9 o'clock program to Bob Burns for at least a month. Lanny Ross' final broadcast as master of ceremonies on the Show Boat is set for Thursday night, after which Charles Winninger, the original "Cap'n. Henry"; Thomas L. Thomas, the baritone; Nadine Conner, the soprano; Jack Haley, the comedian, and Virginia Verrill, the singer, will head the Show Boat crew. Dr. Allan Roy Dafoe will conclude his current series Friday morning.

Frank Parker, the tenor, will replace Lily Pons in the Andre Kostelanetz series Wednesday night, and Alice Faye will take Kay Thompson's place with Hal Kemp's orchestra Friday evening. Mrs. F. D. Roosevelt's concluding program will come July 14.

ALL WEAF and WJZ network broadcasts by the NBC from the Boy Scout Jamboree at Washington from June 30 to July 9 will be transmitted by short wave for European and Latin-American reception. Plans for covering the Jamboree include erection of a complete radio studio in a large tent near the base of the Washington Monument, scattering of microphones at strategic points and use of mobile and pack transmitters, so that announcers and commentators can roam at will through the camp. Events at the jamboree that will be reported by radio include the flag-raising ceremony Wednesday morning, June 30; the camp fire, with addresses by noted Scout leaders, the same evening; the Non-Sectarian Inspiration Convocation Sunday, July 4; the Boy Scouts' tribute to the Unknown Soldier; the Jamboree celebration of Independence day, President Roosevelt's review of the Jamboree parade and his inspection tour between the lines of the Scouts, and his reception to the Scouts at the White House the morning of Thursday, July 8.

Full coverage of the American Legion convention in New York, Sept. 2-23, is planned by the NBC.

Indications are that the contest between the CBS and the NBC, whose series with John Barrymore playing the "leads" began last Monday evening, to outdo each other in producing Shakespeare's plays for radio will be one of the most intense that radio has known.

IT IS difficult even for experienced obser about the Austrian situation. The Austria of grumblers, and they would be unhapp to do so. But this grumbling has recently It is possible that in a country where the p ernment, and especially the Chancellor, Dr. aware of the dangers of the situation.

There is a report that at a recent raid on the Nazi headquarters in the Teinfaltstrasse the police found an aide-memoire in which the Nazi leader Capt. Leopold sketched his conversations with Hitler some months ago.

Hitler's Alleged Remark.

Hitler was alleged to have told Leopold that he (Hitler) was no longer worried about the Austrian problem: "Austria will fall to us as a ripe apple." An intelligent Austrian, however, remarked, "I doubt whether Austria will fall to Hitler as a ripe apple. Even ripe apples occasionally need much shaking, and this Hitler is not in the position to do. What I am afraid of is that Austria will fall to Hitler not as a ripe but as a rotten apple."

The internal situation in this country has rapidly become worse, largely as a result of the July agreement with Germany. Under the secret terms of the agreement two "nationally orientated" persons were taken into the Government: the Foreign Secretary, Dr. Guido Schmidt, and the Home Secretary, Dr. Glaise-Horstenau.

A Thorn in the Side.

But it was Herr Odo Baron Neustadter-Sturmer, the Heimwehr leader, who in July, 1934, played an important part in defeating the Nazi Putsch, who proved to be the thorn in the Government's side. He was dismissed from the Cabinet on March 20. While he was Minister for Public Security (in charge of the police) the Deutscher Volksbund started its devastating propaganda activities, and even if this new camouflaged Nazi organization was stopped, this enabled the Nazis to collect and reorganize their forces.

The Government supporters grumbled that "the small ones among the Nazis are being arrested; the big ones can run free." And, indeed, a strong situation arose.

Naziism Tolerated.

There was an illegal but for a long time tolerated executive of the Nazis, having its headquarters in a fine office in the Teinfaltstrasse, under the chairmanship of Capt. Josef Leopold. The executive consisted of seven members. This office was alleged to have great influence in Government quarters. This more or less open encouragement of the Nazis caused them to become impudent and active. Those who were hesitant or opportunist now again turned toward the Nazi camp, saying, "If I am a Nazi and the Germans come to Austria I shall be all right. If they do not come nothing dangerous can happen to me."

Everybody knows that the repressive measures of the Schuschnigg government may be disagreeable, but they cannot be compared with the terror of the Nazis.

Why the Politicians Shifted.

And this fact now encouraged doubtful politicians to return to the Nazi block. While the demonstrations on the occasion of the visit of Baron von Neurath in February showed the weakness of the Nazi organization in Vienna, the demonstrations at the recent handball match between Germany and Austria proved that Naziism was making rapid strides even in Vienna.

Discontent With Government Growing in Vienna and Illegal Nazi Organization Gains in Power

Hitler Is Quoted as Saying "Austria Will Fall to Germany as a Ripe Apple," but Others Dispute This.

From the Vienna Correspondent of the Manchester Guardian.
VIENNA, June.

IT IS difficult even for experienced observers to gauge the truth about the Austrian situation. The Austrians were always a nation of grumblers, and they would be unhappy if they had no reason to do so. But this grumbling has recently immeasurably increased. It is possible that in a country where the press is not free the Government, and especially the Chancellor, Dr. von Schuschnigg, is not aware of the dangers of the situation.

There is a report that at a recent raid on the Nazi headquarters in the Teinfaltstrasse the police found an aide-memoire in which the Nazi leader Capt. Leopold sketched his conversations with Hitler some months ago.

Hitler's Alleged Remark.

Hitler was alleged to have told Leopold that he (Hitler) was no longer worried about the Austrian problem: "Austria will fall to us as a ripe apple." An intelligent Austrian, however, remarked, "I doubt whether Austria will fall to Hitler as a ripe apple. Even ripe apples occasionally need much shaking, and this Hitler is not in the position to do. What I am afraid of is that Austria will fall to Hitler not as a ripe but as a rotten apple."

The internal situation in this country has rapidly become worse, largely as a result of the July agreement with Germany. Under the secret terms of the agreement two "nationally orientated" persons were taken into the Government: the Foreign Secretary, Dr. Guido Schmidt, and the Home Secretary, Dr. Glaise-Horstenau.

A Thorn in the Side.

But it was Herr Odo Baron Neustadter-Sturmer, the Heimwehr leader, who in July, 1934, played an important part in defeating the Nazi Putsch, who proved to be the thorn in the Government's side. He was dismissed from the Cabinet on March 20. While he was Minister for Public Security (in charge of the police) the Deutscher Volksbund started its devastating propaganda activities, and even if this new camouflaged Nazi organization was stopped, this enabled the Nazis to collect and reorganize their forces.

The Government supporters grumbled that "the small ones among the Nazis are being arrested; the big ones can run free." And, indeed, a strong situation arose.

Naziism Tolerated.

There was an illegal but for a long time tolerated executive of the Nazis, having its headquarters in a fine office in the Teinfaltstrasse, under the chairmanship of Capt. Josef Leopold. The executive consisted of seven members. This office was alleged to have great influence in Government quarters. This more or less open encouragement of the Nazis caused them to become impudent and active. Those who were hesitant or opportunist now again turned toward the Nazi camp, saying, "If I am a Nazi and the Germans come to Austria I shall be all right. If they do not come nothing dangerous can happen to me."

Everybody knows that the repressive measures of the Schuschnigg government may be disagreeable, but they cannot be compared with the terror of the Nazis.

Why the Politicians Shifted.

And this fact now encouraged doubtful politicians to return to the Nazi block. While the demonstrations on the occasion of the visit of Baron von Neurath in February showed the weakness of the Nazi organization in Vienna, the demonstrations at the recent handball match between Germany and Austria proved that Naziism was making rapid strides even in Vienna.

Naziism, however, is conquering in this country in more than one way. There is, for example, a rapidly growing anti-Semitism in Austria, and while the anti-Semitism of the Catholic Clericals in the past was of religious nature, now it had adopted racial characteristics.

Heimwehr Revived.

The Heimwehr, which was dissolved last year, is now coming to new life in the form of comradeship organizations of former Heimwehrmen, and there is one organization which gathers the former followers of Starhemberg (though the Prince keeps aloof from it), while another collects the friends and comardes of Maj. Fey. The Starhemberg followers, amongst others, adopted not only a decidedly pro-German character (their Linz organ, the Neue Zeit is being sold with the other Nazi papers in Austria), but they have taken the Aryan paragraph for their organization, which means that no Heimwehrman with Jewish ancestry will be taken into it.

Pan Aryan Union.

A Pan Aryan Union has been formed in Vienna which intends to serve as a gathering organization of all Aryans (which means anti-Semites) in the world. The Mayor of Vienna ordered that the name of Heine should be removed from the Heine-Hof, one of the municipal tenement houses, and the marble tablet with Heine's relief portrait was also removed. There is an ever-increasing economic boycott against Jewish doctors and lawyers and against Semitic shopkeepers, and there is even social boycott now to be seen against Jews in quarters which hitherto kept aloof from the Nazis.

On the other hand, not all is well in the ranks of the Nazis. As Germany cannot openly show her hand, the Nazis cannot boast of unity. Just recently a "Feme" (revenge) action of the Styrian Nazis was discovered which led to the arrest of the chief of staff of the illegal S. A. in Austria. Two advertising agents of a German paper were kidnaped by political opponents and released only after 24 hours. Originally it was intended to take them across the frontier.

Rival Nazi Organizations.

The inquiry revealed that it concerned the two rival organizations of the Nazis. One group of the Nazis, and apparently this is the more important one, is now led by Capt. Leopold. But other groups are more radical and have close connections with Frauenfeld and with the Austrian Brown House in Munich. These two groups conduct a regular war on each other. Thus the illegal Oesterreichischer Beobachter sides with Capt. Leopold, while the other illegal Nazi organ, the Nampfruf, assails Leopold.

Probably more dangerous than the active Nazi movement is the growing dissatisfaction in the country. The grumbling in the ranks of the Fatherland Front is now audible everywhere and there is unrest among the Social Democrats.

Workers Grow Restless.

The workers, while naturally hating a regime which destroyed their own organization, up to now stood aloof from any action which would damage the present Government. But the workers have reached the stage where they start to say, "Nothing could be worse than present conditions." It was surprising that on the occasion of the recent demonstrations at the German-Austrian handball match many former Socialists participated. The Government should take notice of this change of mood. And yet the demands of

Progressive Nebraska's One-House Legislature Gave Good Account Of Itself at Its First Session

State Capitol Where First Body of Its Kind Sat

By CURTIS A. BETTS.
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.
LINCOLN, Neb., June 26.

THE Nebraska common sense step in progressive government in etablishing a one-house Legislature with members elected on non-political ballots, supplanting the boss and lobby controlled two-house body, has satisfied the citizenship of the State to such an extent that the sidetracked professional politicians dare only feeble criticism of the experiment.

The first session of Nebraska's unicameral Legislature ended six weeks ago and there has not been a suggestion from any person of prominence in the State that it would be well to return to the old system. Gov. R. L. Cockran, a Democrat elected on a partisan ballot, though not a convert to the one-house system, told the writer that "based on the record of accomplishment, which after all is the real test, the plan has worked out satisfactorily."

It cannot be said that subversive political influences were instantly and automatically banished by the change in legislative methods, but to one who has observed the operations of the two-house Missouri Legislature for many years, as has this writer, there comes a firm conviction that Nebraska has adopted a plan which is mechanically correct and under which Missouri and every other state can have intelligent law making and can end the influence of political bosses and self-serving politicians in the enactment of laws.

Without precedent in this country to guide them, the supporters of the changed system have had to feel their way and in the first session there were instances which showed that they had not been able to foresee all that the ingenuity of practiced politicians could accomplish, but nevertheless in a few months the State has made remarkable progress toward getting the best in lawmaking. With the unicameral Legislature as a start, it has initiated steps toward abolishing politics in county governments and toward centralization of responsibility for the State government in a decreased number of elective State officials.

Success of System Up to Voters.

A good system cannot of itself be a guarantee of perfect government, any more than can a perfectly constructed automobile or airplane function efficiently without an intelligent driver. Under the unicameral legislative system the people of the State is the driver and in the final analysis the system will function for good government only to the extent that the voters accept their responsibilities seriously and use intelligent care in the selection of the members of the Legislature.

Three-fourths of the members of the new Legislature, though elected on non-political ballots, had served as members of previous Legislatures to which they were elected as partisans, and it is not to be wondered that they did not cease to be Democrats and Republicans over night. The wonder is that they were able to cast aside partisanship to the great extent they did in their legislative actions.

Most of them had been political leaders of sorts in their communities and had their political followings, but as future elections on a non-political basis are held, it is reasonable to assume, elections will more and more lose their political aspects with the result that the legislators will be chosen more because of their standings as citizens than as politicians.

But even though politics was not entirely absent in this first session, the atmosphere of the Legislature was not political. On a two-day visit to the body before its adjournment, the writer received a distinct impression of studious, conscientious consideration of the problems up for solution at that time, in sharp contrast to the irresponsible mob action which characterized the Missouri House of Representatives almost daily during the recent and many previous ones, and the coldly calculated politics of the Missouri State Senate, lobby directed and serving the interest of political bosses, partisan politics and special business advantage.

The big start toward revamping the Government in Nebraska is due largely to the efforts of three men, United States Senator George W. Norris, former Congressman John N. Norton and Dr. John P. Senning, professor of Political Science of the University of Nebraska. They looked upon State Government as a business which should be conducted along business lines in the best social and economic interest of the people of the State who paid the cost of government.

They discussed among themselves and with others they called into their conferences the whole problem of the State government, how it could be improved. In these conferences they looked to the time when politics would be abolished in the management of the local affairs of the state and the counties and when State laws would be passed on the basis of merit rather than for partisan political advantage or to repay selfish interests for favors granted politicians and political parties.

Only a Start Attempted in Nebraska.

Though theorists, these three men were very practical theorists, and two of them at least, Norris and Norton, had had long experience in practical politics. They early came to the conclusion that their entire plan would fail if they attempted to do more than

How Missouri Could Do It

LESS than 100,000 voters of Missouri could initiate a movement to substitute a one-house Legislature for the present two-house body, and less than 1,000,000 voters could start the state on the road to progressive government in the interest of the general welfare instead of backward administration in the interest of machine politics.

It is not to be expected that a boss-controlled Legislature would submit a Constitutional amendment to the people, which would be required to change the Legislature, but this can be done through the people's power of initiative. To do this petitions must be circulated in at least nine of the thirteen congressional districts of the state and these petitions must be signed by legal voters to a number equal to 5 per cent of the total vote cast for Justice of the Supreme Court in the last previous election in each of the nine districts. The exact number of signatures required would be only 61,200. The amendment, when submitted to vote of the whole electorate, would be passed if it carried by a bare majority. The total vote of the state at the 1936 general election was 1,828,735. Of this total, more than 800,000 votes were cast by the six largest voting communities in the state, St. Louis, Kansas City, St. Louis County, St. Joseph, Springfield and Joplin.

Proposals to amend the Constitution when submitted under the initiative are voted on at the state election next following the filing of the petitions unless the Governor exercises his authority to call a special election for an earlier date.

Civil Court Trial Provided In Bill House Passed to Simplify Ouster of U. S. District Judges

Congressman Sumners, Author, Declares Senate's Time Should Not Be Wasted on Such Impeachment Cases.

By RAYMOND P. BRANDT.
WASHINGTON, June 26.

CHAIRMAN HATTON W. SUMNERS of the House Judiciary Committee is appraised by his colleagues as a constitutional authority. He is also a determined and resourceful legislator, and this week saw the passage by the House of his bill to revolutionize the ouster by civil court procedure of United States District Judges, who now can be removed from office only by the cumbersome impeachment process. The theory of his bill is that since the Constitution says that Federal judges "shall hold their offices during good behavior," Congress can set up a special tribunal to determine whether their behavior has been "other than good."

Sumners' interest in the ousting of incompetent and corrupt Federal Judges goes back to the impeachment of Federal Judge George W. English of the Eastern district of Illinois in 1926, after the Post-Dispatch had exposed the corruption in that court. Sumners was a leading spirit in the House Judiciary Committee hearings on the conduct of Judge English and was one of the managers appointed by House to conduct the trial in the Senate. English resigned to escape trial, but Sumners' experience in that celebrated case led him to seek ways to simplify the ouster procedure which would be fair both to a Judge under charges and to the Government.

Result of 10 Years' Study.

Since the English episode Sumners has had charge of two other impeachment cases. He was chairman of the House managers in the trial of Judge Harold Louderback of the Northern California district, whom the Senate failed to convict by the required two-thirds majority, and of Judge Halstead L. Ritter of the Southern Florida district, whom the Senate found guilty and removed from office. His present bill, which is admittedly novel and experimental, is the result of 10 years' study by a representative who has had more experience with impeachments than any other man in Congress.

The respect accorded to Sumners is demonstrated by the fact that this proposal to upset the precedents of 150 years was approved in the House by a vote of 218 to 125. Had any other Congressman sponsored it, it would have met much greater opposition. Before it can become a law it must be approved by the Senate and the President. Strange to say, the adverse report of the majority of the Senate Judiciary Committee on the President's plan to reorganize the judiciary mentioned that judges could be ousted for behavior "other than good."

What Constitution Says.

The Constitution has only four provisions relating to the tenure and removal of judicial officers. Article II, Section 4, says:

"The President, Vice-President and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for and conviction of treason, bribery or other high crimes and misdemeanors."

Article I, Section 2, provides that "the House of Representatives shall have the sole power of impeachment."

Article I, Section 3, provides:

"The Senate shall have the sole power to try all impeachments . . . and no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present."

Article III, Section 1, provides that "the judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior."

"Good Behavior."

In the debate on the bill Tuesday, Sumners told the House that "no rule of constitutional construction will admit that there are dead words in the Constitution." Therefore, according to the Texas jurist and legislator, the framers of the Constitution knew exactly what they were doing when they used the words "good behavior" in respect to judges. If judges, he argued, were guilty of behavior "other than good," they could be removed from office, despite the fact they have not been convicted of "treason, bribery or other high crimes and misdemeanors."

"Good behavior" or "behavior other than good," he contended are justiciable issues, just like "due process" and "equal protection," terms which have not been specifically defined either by the Congress or the courts. For Congress to attempt to define these terms, he continued, would be futile, because Congress could not conceive of all situations which might arise.

Provisions of Bill.

Putting it in another way, Sumners and his supporters declared that when a person accepted appointment as a Federal judge he made a contract with the Government conditioned on his continuing good behavior. Whenever a judge's behavior becomes other than good, the contract has been violated and can be terminated by a civil suit, initiated by the House, which would inform the Chief Justice of the United States of the circumstances, who would, in turn, appoint a court of three United States Circuit Court of Appeals Judges to try the case. The Judiciary Committee's bill provided that the prosecutor should be the Attorney-General of the United States or counsel designated by him, but the House approved an amendment by Representative James W. Wadsworth (Rep.), New York, which turned this work over to managers to be appointed by the House.

The Sumners bill further provides that if either party to the suit—a civil and not a criminal action—is dissatisfied with the decision of the three-judge court appeal can be taken under the usual rules to the Supreme Court of the United States. This provision permits a comparatively quick determination of the constitutionality of the measure itself.

Impeachment "Cumbersome."

Sumners and his chief supporters, Representatives Howard W. Smith of Virginia and John E. Miller of Arkansas, emphasized that the proposed new procedure was supplemental to the existing impeachment and Senate trial process, and pointed out that it had been limited to District Judges because it was unfair to try to take up the time of the Senate for weeks and weeks with an official in a limited jurisdiction. They said the Senate trial was suitable for the higher-ranking Judges.

The principal speakers against the proposal were Representatives Emanuel Celler (Dem.), New York; Earl C. Michener (Rep.), Michigan, and U. S. Guyer (Rep.), Kansas, all members of the Judiciary Committee. Michener also played a prominent part in the impeachment of Judge English.

In the debate on the bill Sumners said that the impeachment procedure against District Judges was "ridiculous and cumbersome," and while it is against the House rules to criticise the Senate, he and others pointed out what is known to everyone who has watched the recent impeachment trials, that Senators will not take the time and trouble to listen to the evidence.

Sumner's Argument.

"The only way to get rid of a crooked District Judge now," Sumners told the House, "is to go over there to the Senate and take the en-

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

Indictment of the Legislature.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

CONGRATULATIONS on your editorial of June 15, relative to our State Legislature and its action in increasing the sales tax and promptly making provisions that it be spent with the least possible benefit to the overburdened taxpayer and the greatest benefit to our powerful political machine.

You are doing a great service to the public in voicing a gradually increasing sentiment on its part against taxation without corresponding benefit to the public. Never, to my knowledge, was the question of economy in State administration raised at the late session of the Legislature, but rather the paramount issue was consideration of ways and means of raising by taxation larger and larger revenue, to meet the ever-increasing clamor for State jobs by fathers, brothers, sisters and other relatives and friends of the politicians.

Judging from the comments of those paying the bills by the "bread and butter" tax and the enthusiasm with which the general public views your fearless denunciation of such tactics, it would seem that our State Legislature has at last succeeded in starting an avalanche of public disapproval which will result in a complete repudiation in the only manner a politician can understand—at the polls.

That Cooing-Dove Wallpaper.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

YOUR photograph of the steel mediation board of June 22 revealed a background in which was plainly discernible wallpaper adorned with figures of cooing doves.

What I'd like to know is: Did they chose the room for the suitability of the wallpaper, or did they hang the paper after the meeting convened?

Shaw vs. Barrie.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

WHEN my friend, Sir James Matthew Barrie, died last Saturday, the world lost, in my humble judgment, its dramatist No. 1, and the greatest master of whimsy who ever lived. As a man, he was lovable, forceful and unassuming; and also astute. His judgment on his friend, Bernard Shaw: "Shaw boasts that he is a self-made man. Have you ever noticed how much he worships his creator?"

Said Shaw of Barrie last Sunday: "Barrie had a good, long life. He said everything he wanted to say, and now he's dead. I suppose I'll be dead shortly. Barrie and I were always good friends, but I don't feel sentimental about his death."

I'd be willing to make a side bet with any Shavian worshiper that Peter Pan will outlive any character who's ever managed to squeeze out of Shaw's harpoonish pen.

Suggestion From Illinois.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

I WAS greatly pleased with the editorial you printed as a resume of what the Missouri Legislature had done during the last session and I would like to suggest that, for the benefit of your Illinois readers, you print an editorial telling just what the Illinois Legislature has done, or rather what it has not done.

EDWARD GRENARD.

When the Illinois Legislature adjourns, such an editorial will be printed.—Editor's note.

Missouri's Distinctive Sport.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

EVERY sportsman and nature-lover owes your paper his warmest thanks for that splendid and timely editorial on the Gasconade dam and power site.

The last few years have produced a swarm of individuals to whom every Ozark stream is just a potential source of kilowatt hours rather than the habitat of the bass and jack salmon.

Float fishing is a sport for which Missouri streams are particularly adapted and for which we are nationally famous, but if many more dams are constructed, floating will become a series of portages from one stagnant lake to another.

Our few remaining remnants of unspoiled wilderness are rapidly being destroyed with the advance of concrete highways, so let us at least retain the beauty of our streams and that sport distinctive of Missouri—float fishing.

W. WILLMANN.

Election of Aldermen by Wards.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

THE people of St. Louis have twice voted overwhelmingly in favor of electing Aldermen by wards. At the last election, the voters of the entire State amended the State Constitution authorizing St. Louis so to elect its Aldermen.

Subsequently, one of our legal authorities ruled that we cannot elect by wards until a city law is passed authorizing such procedure. For obvious reasons, the Aldermen are not going to pass it.

There must have been an organized movement behind the two Statewide campaigns. If the organization still exists, I would like to inquire why it has not circulated initiative petitions so the people themselves can vote to pass the necessary law?

FELIX P. LAWRENCE.

GIRDLERISM AND THE CIO.

The earnest and intelligent effort of the Taft mediation board to settle the steel strike has come to naught. The result is disheartening.

We hold no brief for the C I O. Its methods at times have been such as to invite the condemnation of all upholders of law and order. But we are bound to regard the attitude of the steel companies concerned, under the bellicose leadership of Tom Girdler, as one of peculiar shortsightedness.

As the mediation board pointed out in its statement of Thursday on the breakdown of its effort, the heads of the four independent companies involved in the strike "have not, either during the strike or before it, ever met with union representatives." Among the great middle section of the public that has no private ax to grind in the steel strike but is interested only in seeing fairness done both to the companies and the workers, there will be widespread approval of the board's conclusion:

> We cannot but believe that the bitterness and suspicion which separate the two sides would be allayed by a man-to-man discussion around the conference table, and that the only hope of settlement lies in such a meeting.

Taking into account the valid question that exists as to "the extent of the union's actual membership and its right to speak for the employes," the board proposed the following settlement:

> The making and signing of an agreement with the union, to become effective only if the union wins an election; the calling off of the strike and the return of all men to work; the holding of a secret-ballot election in the company's plants by the National Labor Relations Board; the agreement to go into effect if the union wins, and to be torn up if the union loses.

The steel companies, declining to enter into any form of agreement with the C I O on the ground that it is "totally irresponsible," say that it is not their employes who want a change in relations but that "it is the C I O that wants a contract."

Is not that contention answered by the mediation board's proposal that the sentiment of the workers be tested in secret elections in each company's plants, and the contract be torn up if the union loses?

The board brands the refusal of the companies to enter into any agreement as "unwise." We agree that it is.

The board's considered judgment must carry weight with the public not only because of the obviously fair and patient manner in which it went about its duties, but because of the character of its personnel. The views of such men as Charles P. Taft II, Lloyd Garrison, dean of the Law School at the University of Wisconsin, and Edward F. McGrady, Assistant Secretary of Labor, are entitled to respect. Chairman Taft is a son of the former President and Chief Justice, and during the last campaign he was an adviser of Gov. Landon. Our correspondent writes that complete harmony prevailed among the members at all times; that it was Mr. Taft, the Republican member, a man of progressive views but by no stretch of the imagination a "Bolshevist," who led the effort to break down the operators' resistance to an agreement. Mr. Taft is reported to have been "aroused and indignant over their refusal to negotiate with the union."

It may be granted that Mr. Girdler and his associates were within their legal rights. It may be granted that they had a measure of provocation. Yet the fact remains, as we believe, that their die-hard tactics have served neither the self-interest of the steel companies nor the public interest. It is not by such tactics, on either side, that the terribly difficult problem of capital and labor relations will be solved. The Girdlers of the steel industry would do well to take a leaf from the book of the more enlightened Myron Taylors.

The mediation board having failed to effect an agreement, the battle goes forward along the picket lines. It is the function of the Pennsylvania and Ohio state governments, as of all governments, to enforce the law without favor, whether that enforcement be directed to preserving the strikers' right of peaceful picketing, or the right of the companies and their workers to be secure against violence.

The opportunity faces the C I O to prove by its deeds that it is a self-disciplined organization, capable of controlling the hot-heads within its ranks and determined and able, under responsible leadership, to enforce upon its members whatever agreements it may make with employers. Unauthorized strikes in the automobile industry after the companies had signed contracts with the union have done heavy damage to the union's cause. Only by a course of action proving its worthiness to be regarded as a responsible agency can the union hope for the public support that is necessary, in the final analysis, to its success.

OZARK ART.

Everyone who is interested in the Ozarks and their culture will be pleased at the great interest shown in the current Ozark art exhibition at Rolla. A part of a countryside festival, the exhibition attracted so many painters that the sponsors limited the entries to one for each artist. The picturesque cabins which are familiar to all who know the region, its clear winding rivers, its old mills with their great wheels, the valleys and farmlands and historic landmarks like Pilot Knob are portrayed in early summer dress, in the brilliant colors of an Ozark autumn, under winter's snow.

But if the idea of a comprehensive exhibition is new, Ozark painting itself is old. Frank Nuderscher's recent letter telling of his first visit to Taun Sauk, as he calls Missouri's highest point, reminds us that he has been painting the scenic points of our near Southwest for a quarter of a century. Long before that, other artists were brought under its spell. The lovely, hospitable upland we call the Ozarks was old and resting when the Rockies and Alps were just pushing up to mountainhood.

THAT MODEL T BLACK MALLARD.

We can hardly quit glancing at that pamphlet issued by the Bureau of Biological Survey about the flight speed of birds, and its tables of fascinating figures, such as the 49-mile-an-hour pace hit by a frightened quail, the herring gull throttled down to 12 miles for a landing, the California duck hawk splitting the wind like a Lockheed-Electra at 180 and the scissor-tailed fly catcher ambling along at 10.

No doubt the observers who did their clocking from airplanes, train and automobiles had a lot of fun, too. One of them, H. B. Wood, reports he timed a black duck—what we in St. Louis call a black mallard—at 26 miles an hour, using his automobile speedometer. In this part of the world, the black mallard is often seen in flocks of his greenhead cousin. The greenhead, according to the pamphlet, does an easy 50, or about twice the speed assigned by Mr. Wood to the black duck.

Maybe the greenheads considerately slow up when a black mallard joins them. Maybe that black mallard observed by Mr. Wood was an old model—a Model T, say. But our final guess—based upon here-he-comes-and-there-he-goes experience in watching black mallards give it the gun—is that Mr. Wood's speedometer was having an off day.

PROBLEMS OF MEDICAL CARE.

The problem of providing adequate medical care for the American people has long been a subject of widespread discussion. Despite the high level that medical science has reached, its facilities, for economic reasons, are not fully available to a great part of the public.

The outstanding report in this field, issued by the Committee on the Costs of Medical Care in 1932, showed that less than 7 per cent of the population has a physical examination annually, and less than 5 per cent is immunized against disease. "Even in a prosperous era," the report stated, "millions of families cannot afford to obtain any medical care."

Yet in 1930, the country spent $3,600,000,000 for medical care, $30 per capita, an amount sufficient, according to competent authorities, to provide adequate service for all. The maldistribution is shown further in the figures for physicians' incomes. In 1929, one-third of them had net earnings of less than $3000, and one-half less than $3800.

Many proposals have been made to bring supply and demand together, but without result. The American Medical Association has always opposed steps toward anything that might possibly be considered state medicine, for fear of political interference. At the association's recent convention, the subject was more frankly discussed than ever before. While the report finally adopted makes only the slightest retreat from the previous stand, the association at least went on record as being willing to co-operate with the Government in working out a plan.

The New York delegation appeared at the convention with a scheme for having the Government pay the bills of patients unable to pay their own. "The immediate problem," it explained, "is provision of adequate medical care for the indigent, the costs to be met from public funds." This, however, is not the real problem, nor is a Government subsidy for doctors the real solution. Free clinics are available in abundance for the impoverished, and medical care is provided for this group in relief budgets. The middle class, whose millions do not desire charity but find their family budgets wrecked by the unexpected demands of illness and accident, presents the real immediate problem.

In many cities, including St. Louis, hospital insurance plans have developed successfully in recent years. For moderate regular payments, workers are entitled to hospital care whenever needed. This has meant relief for budgets and better payment of doctors' bills because of the saving in hospital expense.

Physicians as a class abhor the thought of state medicine, and the general public would prefer not to see government invading another field. Therefore, an insurance plan for medical care is the preferable solution for this problem. Though the A. M. A. continues to oppose insurance, it may face some day a choice between such a plan and outright political control. It should be possible to set up an insurance plan to be supervised by the profession itself, thereby ministering to the people's health, benefiting the physicians and avoiding the pitfalls of governmental interference.

SODA-POP PROFITEERING.

The adding of a penny or two to the standard price of soda pop in the city's parks has been a minor gouge, but nevertheless an annoying imposition on adults and often the cause of disappointment to children. The explanation was that the city found it could not make a profit at the nickel level, so raised its price to 6 cents, while the stand on the Zoo grounds began to extract 7 cents per bottle from the thirsty. Responding to the public indignation that resulted, Mayor Dickmann has ordered the price restored to 5 cents at the city's stands.

The Mayor has the right idea when he says: "The city parks are for recreation purposes and not for profit," and hence the soda-pop gouge "does not appear to be either warranted or necessary." There must be something wrong with refreshment stand management, however, if a profit cannot be made at 5 cents. Private vendors who pay rent and do not have the thousands of customers attracted by park facilities are able to make a profit at that price.

It would be well for Zoo officials to get in line, too, and reduce their price to 5 cents. Such trivial profiteering does not accord with the high standards of the world-famous St. Louis Zoo, and certainly is not productive of good will.

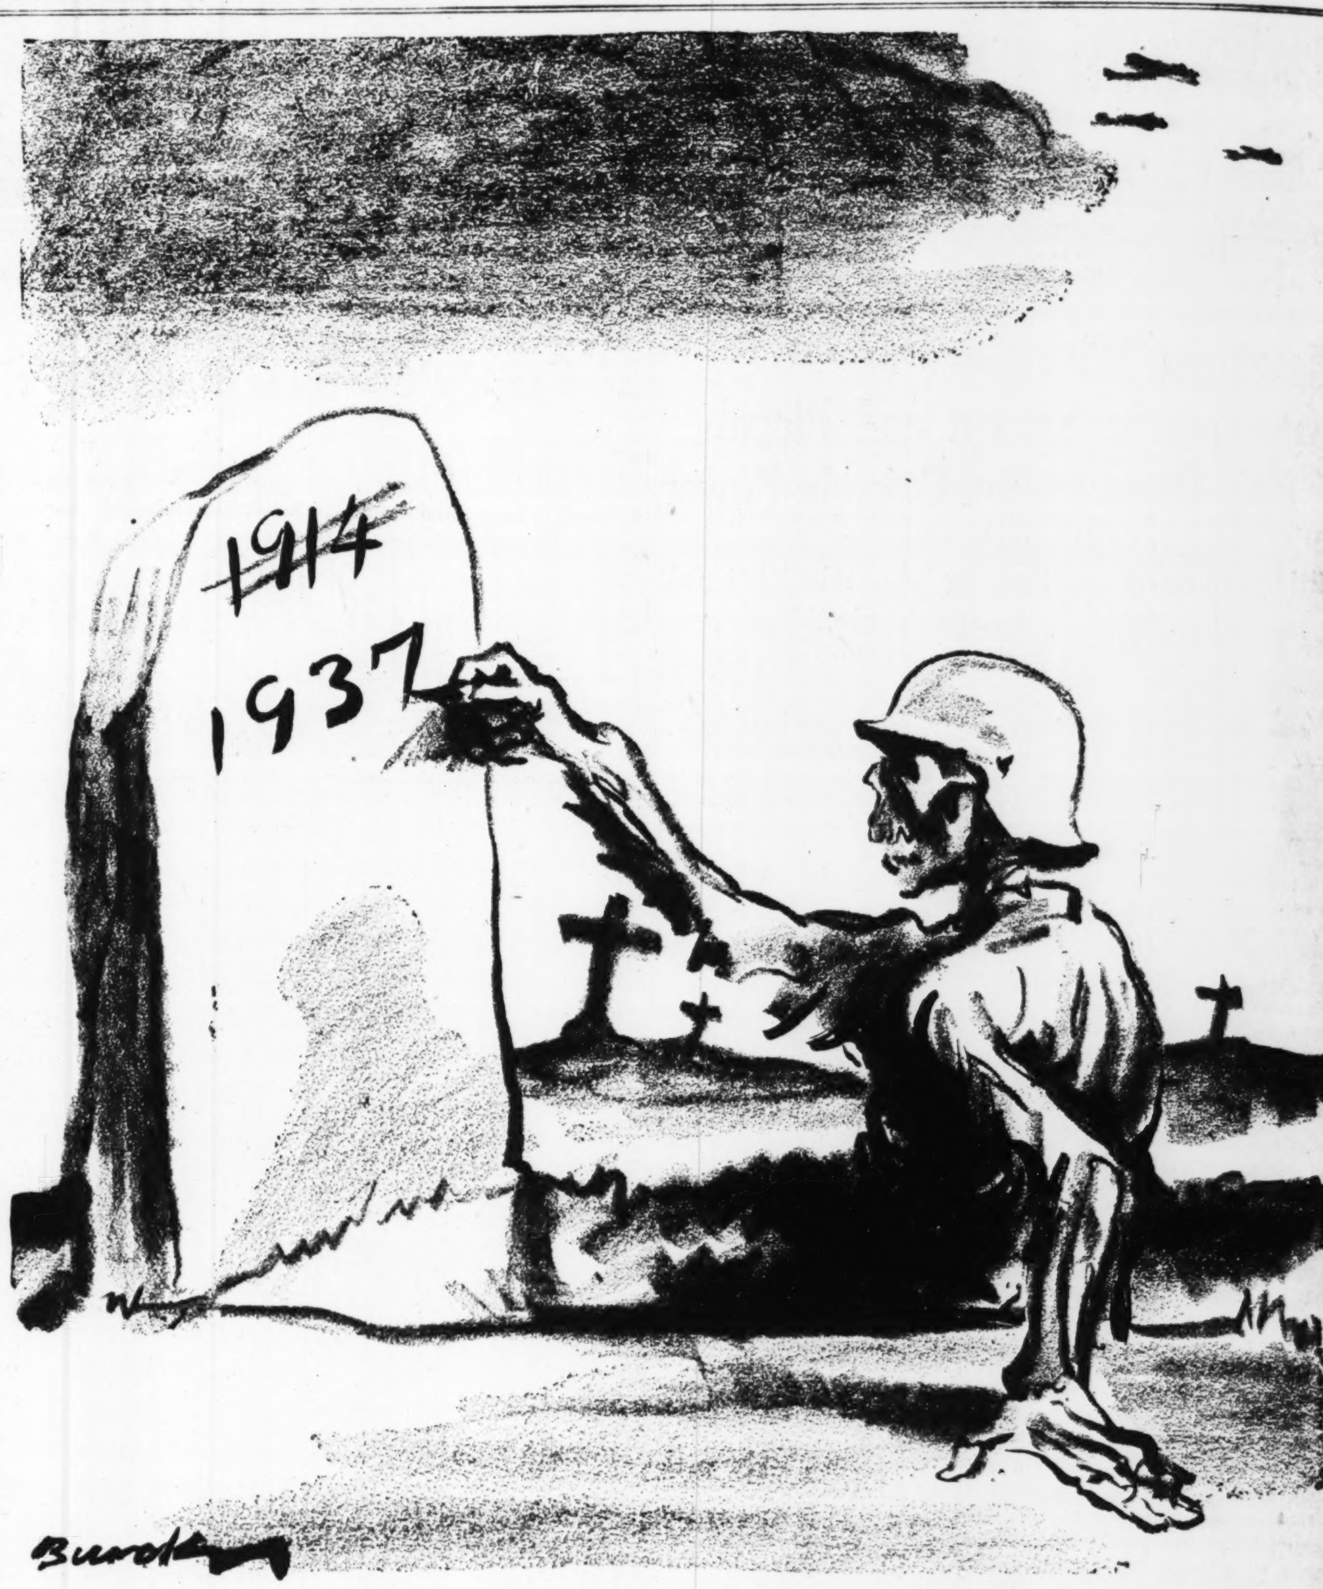
TO PROTECT REAL ESTATE INVESTORS.

Everyone knows what a scandalous racket grew out of the collapse of thousands of over-capitalized real estate properties in the depression years. Those who did not, as actual investors, find themselves fleeced going and coming, first by the promoters and then by the reorganizers, knew people who did or read of the widespread abuses. If anything was left after the crash had deflated the promoters' balloons, in all too many cases those who represented themselves as protectors of the bondholders' interests frittered away what remained in excessive fees for receivers and lawyers.

A congressional investigation was inevitable, and legislation based on the findings is a proper expectation. The bill which Representative Sabath of Illinois, dean of the House and chairman of the investigating committee, is sponsoring, now has the approval of the House Judiciary Committee. It provides for strict supervision of all real estate receivership plans, disbursements and collections by the Comptroller of the Currency, who would act as conservator in conjunction with the Federal courts. The Sabath bill also limits the amount which receivers may be paid. Recommendations looking to the same safeguards have been proposed by the Securities and Exchange Commission, which also has made a thorough study of real estate receivership and reorganization activities.

Responsibility for carefully drawn legislation of this sort lies heavily upon Congress. The financial buzzards must never again be permitted to pick the real estate carcasses. Our Representatives and Senators would use well the time before the vote on the court bill if they worked out the proper protective machinery.



HISTORY REPEATS.

Tragedy of the Basque Children

Scenes of grief and hysteria when news of Bilbao's fall reached camp of young refugees in England show Basques' deep devotion to homeland, writer says; though saved from horrors of war, children are desperately homesick; group's reaction viewed as symbolizing Spanish devotion to country and hatred of foreign interventionists.

Anne O'Hare McCormick in the New York Times.

IF the siege and fall of Bilbao ever finds its Homer, and he seeks a scene to convey all the terror and pity of the Spanish tragedy, no episode will serve his purpose better than what happened when the exiled Basque children in England heard the news of the capture of their city.

The head of the British Broadcasting Co., Sir John Reith, was visiting the camp at Stoneham, near Southampton, where 300 of the little refugees are sheltered, as the insurgent forces were entering the Basque capital last Saturday afternoon. Whether he was there with a traveling radio van for the purpose of broadcasting the reaction of the children is not clear. At any rate, when reports of the taking of the city were confirmed, the announcement was immediately broadcast to these faraway victims of the war.

The effect on the children might have been expected. Bedlam broke loose in the camp. Some of the boys and girls ran to their tents sobbing convulsively. Others stoned the van that brought the bad tidings. Still others seized tent pegs and sticks and turned on their hosts and guards. Most of them broke through the fences and hedges inclosing the camp and made for the woods or tried to board the busses bound for the near-by towns. Their first impulse was to get away.

They wanted to go home. Whatever other emotion broke bounds in this outbreak, it is clear that primarily the "mass hysteria" was violent homesickness. Not so much the thought of Bilbao captured by the enemy, but just the thought of Bilbao, and the images it evoked of home and family and familiar things, tore the heart strings of these poor, wild youngsters in a strange land and drove them mad.

It must be remembered of these children that they lived for nine months under siege before they were rescued. They were unnerved by bombardment, terrified, undernourished. On top of that, they were torn from their parents and sent on a long voyage, to be cared for by strangers. From scraps of news relayed from the camps, it is evident that they have been unhappy and bewildered in England. That was inevitable.

Children of war, scarred by its hatred and unreason, they were unhappy to begin with, and good food, safety in a peaceful land, the warm kindness of their hosts, cannot make up for what they have lost.

The English have done their best to make them feel at home. As far as possible, they have been provided with Spanish teachers and attendants. But it is impossible for people living under normal conditions to imagine the shocks and strains these children have suffered. Otherwise, after the panic in one camp when a squadron of airplanes flew overhead, news of Bilbao's fall would not have been sprung on them suddenly, against the advice of Basque officials.

It is next to impossible for people safe at home to understand at any time the bitter desolation of the exile, particularly an exile with the passionate local patriotism, the fierce independence, of the Basque. When these desolate strangers are children, cut off from their families, haunted by horror—the violence of their rebellion against their fate stirs emotions too deep for tears.

Beyond emotion, it stirs searching questions. Undoubtedly, it was a humane thing to evacuate from the war zone these innocent victims of war. Lost and homesick as they are, their lot is infinitely better than those left behind. The lives of many have been saved by their removal from danger and by the care and nourishment they have received since. Nevertheless, the 4000 sent to England, the hundreds harbored in France, Russia, Mexico and other countries constitute a very small proportion of the children in the battle area. Actually, they are a sample—and a symbol.

Both as a sample of what happens to children in modern war and as symbol of a cause, these exiles arouse universal indignation and compassion. No one can think of these bitter little refugees, scattered over the earth, without hating the invaders of their country and being sickened to death by the insane sadism of war. Yet one may wonder if the humane instinct that inspired their rescue was wholly wise.

But if for a breath the mind could be purged of all ideology to make room for a purely human view of the Spanish conflict, this flare of pent-up feeling among the little Basques abroad, this small insurrection against the kindliest foreign interference, this unreasoning rush to go home, might teach something to divided Spain and its divided partisans.

The Basque case is special, to be sure. It is very clear that the Basques under Aguirre are fighting a war within a war, neither for nor against Fascism or Communism, but for their own homeland, their own state, their own deeply-rooted tradition. They have been invaded by one army in the civil war and let down by the other, and may henceforth be against both. Nevertheless, in all of Spain, in greater or less degree, there is the same pull of the soil, love of home, passion for the country, recoil against outside interference.

If the Basque children in exile were meant by anyone to serve as a demonstration, it may turn out to be a demonstration, obvious to all but ideologists, that interventionism, by friend or enemy, won't decide the fate of Spain. The Iberians, as Strabo observed, never put their shields together. In their long and stormy history, neither have they ever left space enough between for a stranger to squeeze in.

DATABLE GOLD.

From the Newark Evening News.

AN American expedition has been excavating in Mesopotamia. Digging down through 16 levels of successive civilizations, there have been uncovered articles made in the sixth millennium B. C. Among them are gold beads found in a pot secreted under a floor, described as a Stone Age cache of "the first gold hoarder." The experts also consider that this store is "the first datable gold"—the first evidence ever found that value had been placed on gold.

The last datable gold in the United States bears the imprint 1933. It is valued, at the moment, at $35 an ounce. Ours is buried in the ground near a fort in one of our Southern states. An expedition from Bagdad will dig it up somewhere around 3000 A. D.

Building the Constitution

The seventh of a semi-weekly series describing the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention, held 150 years ago.

PHILADELPHIA, June 26, 1787.

THE troublesome question of the length of the terms of members of the national Legislature, on which almost every delegate had his own ideas, was settled today as the Constitutional Convention began its second month of deliberations. After much debate, it was agreed to propose two-year terms for members of the first branch and six-year terms for the second branch, one-third of the latter to expire every two years.

In adopting these terms, the convention disregarded its own recommendations, made as the Committee of the Whole, dissolved on June 19. These recommendations were for three-year terms for Representatives and seven-year terms for Senators.

The one-year term for members of the first branch was widely supported and had there been any change from the terms adopted, it would have been to that. Delegate Elbridge Gerry of Massachusetts made a strong plea for the one-year term, declaring annual elections to be "the only defense of the people against tyranny." This reflected the New England use of the annual session of the popular Assembly to keep the Royal Governors in check in colonial times.

The most scholarly delegate, James Madison of Virginia, argued with much force for three-year terms. He contended that terms of at least that length would be required for Representatives to obtain a knowledge of the needs of states other than their own. Madison, joined by Edmund Randolph of Virginia and Richard Spaight of North Carolina, favored seven-year terms for Senators.

Judge Roger Sherman, delegate from Connecticut, who rose from a shoemaker's bench to the mayoralty of New Haven, joined Gerry in vigorous support of the one-year term. "Representatives ought to return home and mix with the people," Judge Sherman said in what some delegates have begun to call his "New England cant." If they remained at the seat of government for long periods, they would, he said, "acquire habits of the place, which might differ from those of their constituents."

Young Alexander Hamilton of the New York delegation, who amazed the convention early this week by proposing that the chief executive and members of the second branch serve so long as their behavior was good, urged longer terms. Asserting that "frequency of elections tended to make the people listless to them and to facilitate the success of little cabals," he said the consequent evil results were "complained of in all the states." Senators now serve five years in Maryland, four in New York and Virginia, three in Delaware, two in South Carolina.

Charles Pinckney, 30-year-old delegate from South Carolina, made a memorable speech yesterday on the nation of the future as he saw it. Pointing to the peculiarly favorable position of the country, he said it should enable every citizen to enjoy "an equal power of arriving at the supreme office." It should also extend to them "all the blessings of civil and religious liberty, capable of making them happy at home."

Capt. Jonathan Dayton of New Jersey has arrived and is now seated. His father was named a delegate but preferred to stay behind the counters of his flourishing general store. The son, who is only 27 years old and has the reputation of being a gay blade, was sent by the father, largely, so it is said, to part him from his New Jersey associates.

ROME, June 26.—Premier Mussolini's newspaper, Il Popolo d'Italia, told the Italian people tonight that Europe's present crisis would be solved shortly by the fal lof Madrid and a complete insurgent victory in Spain. Those who read the prominently displayed article believed Mussolini wrote it. The paper declared that a cleanup of the Basque territory was all that remained to be done before Generalissimo Francisco Franco could throw the whole weight of his forces against Madrid.

The article was placed before the main editorial, devoted to the general Fascist complaint of the day, that Communist and "Democratic" newspapers are indulging in "lying" accusations concerning Italy's actions in Spain.

Those newspapers, the article said, predicted Spain would be the grave of Fascism. On the contrary, it asserted, Spain will be the "Tomb of Bolshevism."

This, Il Popolo continued, would bring peace to Western Europe.

The article was titled, "Cry and Avalanche," interpreted as a take-off on Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain's speech in the House of Commons yesterday. Chamberlain compared the situation to mountains where a "sudden exclamation may start an avalanche."

Il Popolo's comment was published as Fascist officials assured inquirers that a calm attitude was justifiable. They said, however, that Italy and Germany would not welcome separate action by Great Britain and France to assume a naval patrol of the entire Spanish coast.

The officials indicated, however, that such action was not likely, since the entire matter must be discussed by the non-intervention committee, in which Germany and Italy retain formal membership.

(Germany and Italy withdrew their warships from the four-power naval patrol of Spain, but did not quit the "hands off Spain" committee.)

The Il Popolo article said:

"The crisis will definitely be resolved upon the day on which Gen. Franco will be freed of the last resistance of the Basques and may throw against the central front all the weight of his well tempered forces, galvanized by a spirit of victory. There will be, as often happens, an acceleration of operations. The iron band around Madrid, like that around Bilbao which seemed impenetrable, will be broken."

MUSSOLINI PAPER PREDICTS FALL OF MADRID SOON

Says Present Crisis in Europe Will Be Solved With Complete Insurgent Victory in Spain.

BASQUE CLEANUP NEXT TO LAST STEP

Paris Just Another Big City And Our Ambassador There Is A Regular Fellow, Says Al Smith

Capital's 20 Mayors and Government Spending in France Impress Him—International Fair Open But Not Ready.

By ALFRED E. SMITH.
(Copyright, 1937.)

LONDON, June 26.

I ARRIVED in Paris Sunday morning and the party went from the railroad station to church. After breakfast we started out to see Paris. Viewing it as a whole, it is just another big city, and comes nearer to looking like New York than any other city so far visited. Its wide boulevards and large trees are a pleasing sight, but, of course, you are constantly reminded of the fact that you are not in New York because of the absence of tall buildings and the large number and the size of outdoor restaurants.

The first thing Monday morning I called on the American Ambassador in company with the men of our party, and he spent quite some time with us and we unanimously declared him to be a real fellow. We in the United States have abundant reason to be very proud of our foreign representatives, whether in the embassies or the consular service.

I had the pleasure of an interview with President Lebrun, a very pleasing personality, and he was glad to see me. He expressed his gratitude for my attention to his family on the day of their visit to the Empire State Building.

During our week in Paris the political pot was boiling over, and I was denied the pleasure of meeting Premier Blum, as he was called before the Senate to defend his financial policy at the very hour set for our conference. A few hours later he no longer was Premier.

Lunches at American Club.

I was the guest of honor at a luncheon of the American Club of Paris, the president of which is an old-time friend of mine and was secretary to Mayor Mitchell 20 years ago. He now is resident manager of the Paris branch of the Guaranty Trust Co. The American Club was founded by Benjamin Franklin in 1777. It was the outgrowth of a series of dinners that he used to give at his home when he was acting as the first diplomatic representative in France of the 13 American colonies. It is the largest organization of American citizens outside of the United States.

Of course, it would take a long time to see Paris properly, so we were compelled to be satisfied with touching the high spots. The Cathedral of Notre Dame, to my way of thinking, is the outstanding attraction. The cornerstone was laid in 1163, and it was finished in 1315. The tomb of Napoleon is quite a sight. His remains are in a huge marble casket in the center of the structure. Around the sides are the last remains of many of his generals. The last burial was that of Marshal Foch.

Dinner at Maxim's.

We had dinner one night at Maxim's, an outstanding restaurant that boasts of 100 years of existence at the same spot.

A very interesting day was had by our visit to Versailles. We saw the room where the treaty of peace was signed by the representatives of the allied Powers at the close of the World War.

The palace was erected during the reign of King Louis XIV. Nobody can describe it, but this may give you an idea of its size. In order to visit every rom you would have to walk five miles and spend two and a half hours doing it. This fact is ascertained by the experience of night watchmen who make the rounds of the palace in the course of their duties. At Versailles our party was the guest of Henry Haye, the Mayor of the city. At luncheon we were joined by several of the city officials and the former Premier of France, Laval. I met him on his recent visit to New York and he remembered the Empire State Building. The thing about New York that impressed him was the great amount of water around the city. I told him that whereas we may have had prohibition by law, New York was always wet.

I also had a pleasant visit with Cardinal Verdier, the Archbishop of Paris, a delightful man whom I met when he visited the United States.

The 20 Mayors of Paris.

We think we have a top-heavy form of Government in New York City, and complaint has been made about duplication of positions and consequent cost to the taxpayer. Here is one for you. In Paris there are 20 mayors. They are elected in divisions of the city that would correspond to our wards, and each mayor has his own city hall, all of them imposing-looking structures.

These mayors really constitute a city council and select what you might call a lord mayor. However, the 20 mayors retain certain administrative duties. It sounds a little like our borough government in New York City. There is a chief of police under each mayor, and the prefect of police of Paris is the commissioner. Also under each mayor there are separate departments of government as follows: Department of welfare, employment agency, a commission of police and a funeral department. The last named is a new one to me. It means that the conduct of funerals is a city function. A pallbearer is therefore a public official.

Of course we visited the Louvre, that corresponds to our Museum of Art in Central Park, except that our museum would fit in one small corner of the Louvre. Pictures painted in 1830 are called modern.

International Exposition.

I spent some time in the International Exposition. There was very little to see, as the fair buildings are yet in course of construction, although the fair was supposed to open May 1. The only buildings completed are those of Russia and Germany. The United States building is away from the center of the fair ground and is not completed. It is supposed to be open on July 4, but no one that I spoke to believes it can be finished by that time.

My questioning as to the cause of the delay brought forth the reply that the workmen held back and demanded that the Government make an appropriation for some other public work of sufficient size to allow them to continue working when the fair buildings and grounds are finished. This apparently the Government refused to do. As a result several countries sent their own workmen to Paris to complete their exhibitions just a few days before our arrival. England sent painters in airplanes to put the finishing touches on the British Empire Building.

It would take a lot of time and space to tell what is the matter with France. It can be summed up in a few words: Excessive taxation, high cost of living, Government spending in excess of Government income, and Government borrowing of money.

Court Trial For Accused U. S. Judges

tire time of the Senate of the United States away from all other business of a great nation and make them sit there for days and days and days while we introduce evidence as though they were an ordinary trial court, when we know they are not a trial court.

"They would sit there to try a Supreme Court Justice or the President or the Circuit Court of Appeals Judges, but we know they will not try District Judges, and we can hardly ask them to do it. I am ashamed to go over there, as the representative of this House, and ask the Senate of my nation to sit and try a District Court Judge. There is not a sensible, practical thing about the whole business.

"We have done our best within the limits of due caution. We expect that experience will suggest improvements. But I would risk my life and what little reputation I have for knowing something about the Constitution that we are undertaking a constitutional method to make alive the good behavior provision in the judicial tenure clause of the Constitution.

Big Gun for Small Game.

Representative Sam Hobbs (Dem.), Alabama, a member of the Judiciary Committee, supported Sumners' argument that the present method of removing corrupt district judges was cumbersome.

"It seems to me perfectly true," he said, "that the experience we have had with impeachment in these 150 years of our national existence has abundantly proved that there is no need of a 16-inch gun to shoot the twig from under a sparrow! We laboriously load, we shoot, and the twig falls—once in a while. The sparrow flies away to other fields. But such a big cannon is absolutely unnecessary and a waste of time, effort and ammunition.

"We respectfully submit that in this bill there is a better way. A smaller gun with a surer aim has been devised by the master mind who heads this committee, and it is presented for your acceptance or rejection today."

Method of Procedure.

As described by Sumners and others, the procedure under the proposal would be the same as the impeachment method, so far as the House is concerned. A member of the House would prefer charges on the House floor against a judge, the charges would be referred to the Judiciary Committee for investigation and hearings, and if the committee found the charges substantiated it would report to the House its recommendation. Instead of a resolution of impeachment, however, the resolution would cover the charges and ask the Chief Justice to appoint a court of three Circuit Court of Appeals judges to try the case as a civil and not as a criminal issue. By the Wadsworth amendment, House managers would conduct the prosecution in the court just as House managers have conducted impeachment trials in the Senate. A judge convicted in this manner would have the advantage of appeal to the Supreme Court. Former Judge Ritter sought review of his case by the highest court by initiating a suit for salary in the Court of Claims, but the Supreme Court refused to grant him a writ of certiorari, and he lost his case.

View of Opposition.

Opponents of the Sumners bill, while admitting that the impeachment procedure is cumbersome for a mere District Judge, argued that impeachment was the only constitutional method.

Representative John W. Gwynne (Rep.), Iowa, pointed out that the late Chief Justice Taft, in 1912, had said in a speech that a liberal interpretation of "high misdemeanors" encompassed misconduct involving bad faith, wantoness and recklessness in judicial actions. Gwynne said that "high misdemeanors" meant behavior other than good. Celler declared that there were no short cuts in a judicial ouster, and that "we must follow the Constitution."

"The only constitutional way," he said, to reach the goal set by Sumners was by amendment.

"If we have the right to say that a Supreme Court Justice shall select the Circuit Court judges to act as a tribunal," he continued, "then we have the equal right to say, Tom, Dick and Harry shall be the court to try these District Judges. We would equally have the right to say that three presidents of three distinct Chambers of Commerce or three Daughters of the Nile may try these judges. If we have the right to set up another ouster court, we can with equal grace pick our own judges. We are the sole judges of the judges."

Summers Replies.

Answering Celler, Chairman Sumners said there had been some doubt in the committee whether Congress could create a new court to hear the ouster suit and that the majority believed that it could.

"This is to be a suit," he explained, "by the United States against a Judge for violating the conditions of his contract. Is the Judge helpless? The Judge can be represented before the three Judges by the best lawyers he can employ. I have heard many about the court since this controversy but I never heard it said until today that three Judges of the Circuit Court of Appeals trying a District Judge might stultify themselves in order to convict an honest man and remove him from office."

Representative Francis H. Case (Rep.), South Dakota, offered an amendment, which was rejected, to authorize the Senate to designate four Senators to sit with the three Circuit Judges.

Trenching on Senate's Powers.

"If you say to the Senate," he told the House, "that it shall have no voice in the removal of Judges, there is no possibility of this bill being accepted by the Senate, because it strikes directly at what the Senate may or may not do at any time in preserving the integrity and independence of the judiciary.

"You may vote this amendment down; it is probably unworkable to have a removal court consist of three Judges and four Senators, but as surely as this bill goes to the Senate I look for the Senate to reassert its right to have a voice in the matter of the tenure of Judges. And for the sake of the rights of the people and the union, which was made possible by the compromise which gave each state two Senators, I hope it does."

What the Senate actually will do with the Sumners bill is problematical. Many Senators have insisted in recent impeachment trials that they just could not afford to spend weeks listening to the evidence. Senators, as Representative Case intimated, are strong protectors of Senators' prerogatives. Whatever the outcome, the Senate will have a difficult time in staying on the high intellectual level attained in the House debate this week on this novel and important measure.

Nebraska's Unicameral Legislature's Record

make a start toward accomplishment of their ultimate aim. They might obtain adoption of a constitutional amendment for a one-house Legislature elected on a non-political ballot, but if they attempted with it to reduce the number of elective officials, provide for non-political ballots in the election of State and county officials and in one fell swoop to banish all politics from State and local affairs, they would encounter opposition from so many quarters that they would accomplish nothing.

So they limited their first activity to changing the form of the Legislature. Successful in that, they moved speedily through the new Legislature toward their other objects. Under Norton's forceful guidance, the Legislature in its first session submitted a Constitutional amendment for a short State ballot, on which only the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor and State Auditor would be elected. Other State officials would be appointed by the Governor. That proposal will be voted on in the next election.

Through a bil introduced by Senator R. M. Howard of Flats (the members are called Senators), an effort was made to provide for the election of county officials on non-political ballots, but that failed. It brought the chairmen of the Democratic and Republican State Committees scurrying to Lincoln, and the strongest political pressure was brought to bear on the members, who, as has been explained, were still Democrats and Republicans, to kill it. It struck at the very basis of political organization of both parties, and its passage would have wrecked them, abolished the jobs and perquisites which keep them alive. The bill failed by a vote of 17 to 26, but the fact that one-third of the members ignored party leaders and ignored political considerations led the supporters of the bill to the conclusion that the reform could be accomplished in a relatively short time.

The evils of the old legislative system had been apparent in Nebraska for many years, just as they have been apparent to those who have observed legislative conditions in Missouri and other states. As long ago as 1913, Norton, then a member of the Legislature, attempted to have submitted a one-house Legislature amendment to the Constitution. He failed then and in several subsequent efforts. In 1923 Senator Norris joined in the movement, which made little progress until 1934, when Norris threw himself whole-heartedly into the battle and made it the leading issue in the State.

In Nebraska as in Missouri and other states, the controlling influences in legislation were politics and the lobbyists representing special interests. The party organizations there as elsewhere were to a considerable extent in collusion with these special interests, which contributed to party campaign chests and often to the individual campaign funds of candidates for the Legislature. They received their payment through legislative favors possible because of the blind following of political legislative leaders by political legislators.

Evils There That Existed Elsewhere.

The secrecy which characterized much legislative procedure was of vast help in concealing from the voters the real facts about legislation. With two houses there was constant "buck passing," and it was usually impossible to definitely fix responsibility for bad laws or for failure to pass good laws.

The conference committee, common to the procedure of all bicameral legislatures, was effectively and secretly used in Nebraska, as it is in Missouri and every other state to permit a very few, six to 10 members, to write the most important legislation.

When two houses of a Legislature are unable to agree in the passage of a bill, it is referred to a conference committee which consists of from three to five members of each house. This committee, meeting in secret, can rewrite the bill, and while it goes back to the two houses for their votes, in practical operation the conference committee writes the law, as almost always conference committee reports are made in the closing hours of the legislative session when a majority of the members are anxious to go home and are giving little attention to the details of legislation. It is seldom a conference committee report, regardless of what it may contain, fails of adoption.

In a one-house legislature there are no conference committees.

The advocates of the Constitutional amendment in Nebraska were convinced from the outset that unless political leadership in the Legislature was prevented, the one-house set-up would be little if any better than the old, and they incorporated in the amendment a provision that there should be no party designations on the legislative ballots in the election.

The organization politicians of both parties fought the amendment, as did the special interests lobbyists, and nearly all the newspapers in the state. Senator Norris campaigned the state vigorously for it. The amendment was adopted by a majority of 92,934 in a total vote of 479,239, receiving majorities in 84 of the 93 counties.

The size of the new Legislature was not fixed in the amendment, that question being left to the last bicameral Legislature within limits of 30 and 60. The number of members was fixed by the Legislature at 43. Under the bicameral system there had been 33 Senators and 100 members of the House.

The opinion of Senator Norris and his associates in the movement that politics could be largely abolished in elections on non-political ballots was shown to have been justified in the November, 1936, election in which the new Legislature was elected for the first time. Although President Roosevelt, as the Democratic candidate, carried the sttae by 99,823, receiving three out of every five votes cast, 22 Democrats and 21 Republicans were elected to the Legislature. In an election which went overwhelmingly Democratic on political ballots, the Legislature was as evenly divided as could be between the two parties.

Party Affiliation Not Considered.

The conclusion which must be drawn from this is that, when the party label is removed, a very large element of the electorate does not consider the party affiliations of the candidates. It probably is a fair assumption also that in future elections politics will have even less a part than it had in the election of the present Legislators.

In the first election membership in the new body was attractive to old Legislators, all of whom had been elected as partisans and most of whom had positions of more or less leadership in their communities.

In the primary as many candidates could file as desired. Two were nominated in each of the 43 districts, and one was chosen in the election. There were 283 candidates for the 86 nominations. Of the 33 State Senators, 22 filed for nomination, 18 were nominated and 13 elected. Of the 100 House members 62 filed for nomination, 37 were nominated and 15 were elected. Thus in the first unicameral Legislature 32 of the 43 members had had previous legislative experience.

The opinion frequently heard expressed in Lincoln is that "most of the best of the old legislators were in the new body and only a few of the worst."

The 22-21 political division under a non-political election is in contrast with the results of the partisan ballot election in 1934, when there were 22 Democrats in the Senate and only 11 Republicans, and 68 Democrats in the House and only 32 Republicans.

The first political test which came before the new Legislature was in the selection of a speaker. The Democrats had a majority of one, and yet the Legislature elected a Republican to the Speakership, chosing Charles J. Warren of Waverly. Warren receievd 23 votes, two more than the total number of Republcans. He actually received three Democratic votes, losing one Republican, who joined with the 19 other Democrats who divided their votes between three Democratic candidates.

Without compass to chart the way, the new Legislature was two weeks in adopting rules and selecting committees, thus delaying the actual legislative work, but that was less time than the Missouri Legislature took in getting into action.

When the rules were adopted, however, they showed they had been carefully prepared with a view to expediting business rather than to aid in delaying business, as do the rules of the Missouri Legislature. They were designed to insure a public hearing on every bill, prompt action, and safeguards which would prevent the passage of unconstitutional, conflicting or ambiguous legislation. The utmost in publicity of all the actions of the individual legislators was provided.

Instead of delegating the selection of standing committees to the Speaker, the Legislature created a Committee on Committees, consisting of 11 members, two from each of the five Congressional districts and one at large to be chairman. The members of this committee were chosen by the legislators residing in the several districts.

In selecting the members by Congressional districts, the Legislature merely used that as a convenient means of creating a committee of 11 members, which is the largest number which may be on any committee under the rules.

New Plan of Apportionment.

In Missouri the president pro tem of the Senate and the Speaker of the House make the committee assignments, and are subject to high pressure from lobbyists who know the value of controlling committees, and by members who seek the opportunity to trade their votes on the election of a president pro tem and Speaker for promises of desirable committee assignments.

In arriving at a total membership of 43, the Nebraska Legislature of 1936 inaugurated a plan of legislative apportionment new to the United States. It abondoned the heretofore universal practice of making population the sole determining rule.

The eastern one-third of Nebraska contains the larger part of the population of the State, being more closely settled and having the larger cities of Omaha and Lincoln. The western two-thirds is sparsely settled, but for a number of years there has been a westward trend to the population. Under the constitutional amendment the new Legislature could not contain more than 50 members nor less than 30. It was found by Dr. Senning in a careful analysis that taking into consideration population of districts, community of interest between the counties, means of communication and common economic interests, with 50 members from 50 districts the eastern one-third of the State would have 18 more legislators than the western two-thirds, and that as the number of districts was decreased this excess of representation for the eastern part of the State diminished until the excess was only 13 when the figure of 43 districts was reached, but that as the number went lower than that the excess for the eastern part of the State gradually increased. It was decided, therefore, that, taking into consideration all of the factors of population, trend of population, ease of communication and common economic interests, 43 was the equitable number of districts, each to be represented by one legislator.

An important feature of the rules adopted by the new Legislature was a requirement that when a committee reported a bill back to the Legislature it must submit with the bill an analysis of its provisions and a written statement of the committee's reasons for its recommendations on the bill. In the Missouri Legislature no member except those on a committee has any means of knowing the motives which actuated a committee's action.

The secret, or "executive session," committee meeting, common to bicameral legislatures, in which most of the skullduggery of legislation is perpetrated, was abolished. Provision was made for a record vote in the committee when passing on bills, and newspaper reporters, barred from executive sessions of committees in the Missouri Legislature, were admitted and were free to publish the details of discussion on bills, the votes of members and anything that transpired in the committee meeting.

Under that system, there could be no star-chamber trading. A member had to act in the open and his constituents had ample means to know at any time just how he was performing.

Under the discredited bicameral system, as followed in Missouri and most of the other states having it, there is no constructive effort to have legislation in good shape when it is passed. Preparation of a bill is more or less haphazard. It may be good, if the author is competent. It most likely is bad if the author is inexperienced or slipshod in his work, as many of them are.

Thoroughness in Writing Bills.

But in Nebraska, the unicameral Legislature settled down to its job as a business to be done in the best possible way. It had the services of an official bill drafter, an experienced lawyer attached to the Legislative Reference Bureau, to draw bills. It employed three disinterested lawyers, one of them the dean of the Law School of Creighton University of Omaha, to pass on the constitutionality of all bills, and paid them $25 a day each.

It had a special committee to pass on the phraseology of bills.

The Missouri Legislature has none of these, and not infrequently the wording of bills is so involved as to be almost unintelligible, a condition which leads to much litigation which could be avoided if the laws were carefully written.

In preparation for the future, the unicameral Legislature created a Legislative Council of 15 of its members, to make a continuing study of the state government, and with full power to examine books and take testimony of witnesses under oath. This council is required to submit a program for needed legislation at the beginning of each session of the Legislature.

Specifically, the law directs that it shall give study to all subjects which go toward better government, to possible consolidations in the state administration, to simplification of government, the merit system, law enforcement and the whole problem of taxation on the state, counties and cities.

How different from the politically controlled Missouri Legislature. The same bill was introduced at the last session in Jefferson City by Senator McMillan Lewis of St. Louis. Such a council might, probably would, make recommendations which would seriously interfere with the expensive system of government, it migh abolish the useless political jobs, with which the Capitol is overrun, but which are considered necessary to keep the party workers in line. It might reveal that politics was an extremely costly thing in the Missouri government.

So the Senate deleted from the Lewis bill everything which would make the Council effective and which would give it power to make detailed investigation, and then the skeleton bill that was left was permitted to die, even as innocuous as it was after amendment.

The Nebraska Legislature, realizing the advisibility in the interests of efficiency of having some sort of continuing organization, made the job of clerk of the Legislature a permanent one. He will have an office in the Capitol, which will be open throughout the year, and there any person may have access to any legislative records and receive information on any legislative matter.

Example of Working of System.

A striking example of the working of the system under which the actions of every member are constantly under public view arose in this first session. The question of ratification of the Federal child labor amendment was up. Women's clubs and labor organizations favored it. Farmers organizations opposed it. Politically it was a tough spot for a legislator, and the nature of the politician showed itself. The question in the committee of the whole was on indefinite postponement, or in effect defeat of the proposal. It was killed without a roll call, and though one was required if one member asked for it, none was demanded.

Immediately there was a storm of protest throughout the State. Labor organizations adopted resolutions denouncing the "cowardly" Legislature for its refusal to have a roll call and disclose how the members voted. So strong was the protest that the measure was called up again, and a roll call had. The result was not changed, but the people had demanded and had received the knowledge of just how each member voted.

Some may say that the special interests lobbyists should find their work much easier under the unicameral system; that the lobbyists can work more effectively with 43 members of one house than with 33 Senators and 100 Representatives, can get "closer" to the individuals. The answer to this is that under the rules the lobbyist can do nothing now without exposing his friends, that publicity has destroyed the power of the lobbyist.

Gov. Cochran, who during his terms has dealt with both bicameral and unicameral Legislatures, told the writer that he still considered the one house an experiment.

"It will be impossible to tell until several sessions have been held whether it is better than the old way," he said. "However, judging from results I can say that I feel the plan has worked out satisfactorily so far. Its future will depend largely on the type of members who are elected.

"You can change the system but you cannot change human nature. Personally I believe that party responsibility is desirable in a legislative body. Members elected on non-political ballots make up a Legislature of 43 individuals without responsible party leadership and there is a lack of co-operation. Without leadership it is impossible to get done some things that should be done.

"The big change is not from two houses to one house. It is the election of members on the non-political ballot. That is a revolution in state government and I am inclined to believe it is a mistake."

Couldn't Use the Party Whip.

The Governor, of course, was looking at the matter from a political standpoint. He is a Democrat, elected on the Democratic ticket, and he had on his hands a Legislature with a slender and undependable Democratic majority of one. Neither the Governor nor the chairman of the Democratic State Committee could crack the party whip and obtain obedience to orders.

The conclusion of the writer after an extensive study of the unicameral Legislature and the results of its first session is that it provides the system, possible in any state, under which there can be intelligent lawmaking without interference of political bosses and special interest lobbyists.

The three outstanding reasons why it is far superior to the bicameral system are:

Evasion of responsibility, "buck passing," is not possible as under the bicameral system.

Election of members on non-political ballots makes those elected responsible directly to the people and not the political bosses.

If Missouri would have a businesslike Legislature and destroy the costly control of its lawmaking by machine-politics and special interests, the way is simple to follow the Nebraska lead.

Color Problem In the South

CHILDREN OF STRANGERS. By Lyle Saxon. (Houghton Mifflin Co., Boston.)

PERENNIALLY the United States faces the problems of racial relationship. In Louisiana, the scene of Lyle Saxon's novel, color patterns are particularly complex. Planters, poor whites, land-owning mulattoes, Negroes, have well-defined places in a formal social hierarchy. Perhaps of necessity, to make living together a possibility for these diverse groups, what amounts to a strict caste system has developed through the years. "Children of Strangers" is a story of individual hope in conflict with rigid social custom. Powerfully the author suggests the price in terms of human suffering at which stability is bought.

Famie, short for Euphemie, is a mulatto girl who takes a white lover. Her baby, born after its father's death, shows no trace of Negro blood. Famie gives her life that little white Joel may have a chance in the world beyond the plantation, where the secret of his race will never be known, where he shall be free. Though Famie marries Numa, a mulatto boy, her first devotion is to Joel. She sends him, still a boy, to Chicago. That he may have money to go to school she slaves, does "nigger" work at the big house. After Numa dies she no longer cares for her caste. She eats with the Negroes; she sells her land, the precious land from which the mulattoes derive their prestige; she becomes an outcast from her own people, all that Joel may have his chance. At length Joel comes home, a strange young white man who cannot hide the fact that he is ashamed of his mother. He soon leaves for the West to "pass." Famie never sees him again.

At 35 Famie looks 50. Her life is finished, but she must go on living. Henry, a Negro whose heart also has been broken by an inarticulate and impossible hope, needs her. He is kind, pathetic in devotion. The book closes with a Negro Easter service of singing, incantation, rhythm, and ecstasy. She and Henry are to be married. She is stoically happy, but never quite forgetful of her lost caste. For the rest of her life no relative will speak to her. There is a grim symmetry about this book. Joel advances. Famie is dragged back. Society exacts its pound of flesh.

Mr. Saxon's prose has richness, color, and, one might almost say, three-dimensionality. The dawns, the heat, the Easter hat, Joel's white baby skin, the sluggard river, the colors of flowers, the daedal quality of spring—one feels them all to be sensibly real. Psychologically, too, the author shows deep perception. Numa's hopeless love, Famie's inarticulate desire, Henry's pathetic wonder are felt as vividly as pain.

Prose Too Hard? Write Poetry!

AMERICAN FRONTIER. By Elizabeth Peck. (Doubleday, Doran & Co., Garden City, N. Y.)

LET the lady explain her book. "'American Frontier'," says Mrs. Elizabeth Peck in her foreword, "is a series of poems based upon pioneer experience in the United States between 1780 and 1875. It was not written for professors of history. Why trouble them with one more book?"

But why should historians alone enjoy immunity?

"'American Frontier,'" the author further assures us, "is for anybody who enjoys full, rich-flavored life, even though he knows little about the history of American pioneering."

Don't historians ever enjoy full, rich-flavored life?

"If you want to enjoy the poems most thoroughly," we are advised, "you will read them aloud not too nicely, but with robust rhythm."

It's always that way with great, elemental works of geniu .

Mrs. Peck teaches history in a Kentucky college, but she has "been steeped in poetry since childhood, and still reads Lucretius and Horace and Homer and Sophocles in the original for sheer enjoyment."

The evidence would seem to indicate that poetry is not a contagious disease.

"But this is a personal matter," continues Mrs. Peck. "My husband is a mathematician, my daughter a lexicographer, my associates historians and economists and sociologists. Where does verse come into all this?"

Mrs. Peck once traveled "on foot and mule-back alone over 800 miles of the deepest and loveliest Kentucky counties," gathering material, but she "dared not write any notes while still on the scene." Instead, she "cultivated, or transferred the discipline acquired in learning Greek paradigms, the knack of stamping into her mind every imaginable detail." Since then Mrs. Peck's life "has been a continuation of that epical experience."

Mrs. Peck first tried to tell it all in prose, "but it was a failure," she confides. Obviously, if one can't write prose, there is nothing to do but write poetry. As now generally understood, it is so much easier.

Two Valuable Histories

THEY BROKE THE PRAIRIE. By Earnest Elmo Calkins. (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.)

A HISTORY OF CHICAGO: THE BEGINNING OF A CITY, 1673-1848. By Bessie Louise Pierce. (Alfred A. Knopf, New York.)

THE story not only of Illinois but of the entire Middle West is considerably enriched by the publication of the first volume of Dr. Pierce's definitive history of Chicago and Mr. Calkins' "account of the settlement of the upper Mississippi Valley by religious and educational pioneers, told in terms of one city, Galesburg, and of one college, Knox." Both books are works of scholarship which will be recognized at once as authoritative studies.

"They Broke the Prairie" appears simultaneously with the centennial of Knox College, founded as a frontier outpost for the solid educational training for which the New England colleges were known a century ago. By a son of the college and of the town as well, it is a happy observance of the anniversary.

Mr. Calkins, author of "Louder Please," the widely read autobiography of a deaf man, follows the westward migration of the founding colony from New York State and the development of the resulting settlement through the eventful years to the present. He packs his pages with details that make informative and lively reading—how the log settlement was carefully planned on paper before it was built, how the pioneers amused themselves with wolf hunts in the '40s, how the little burg played proud host to one of the Lincoln-Douglas debates 79 years ago, how its college remained true to the liberal arts when many colleges were going in for frills and fads.

* * *

Dr. Pierce, who is a member of the University of Chicago faculty, has been at work on her history of the "hog butcher to the nation" for eight years. The first of her volumes lays a brilliant foundation for those which will carry the chronicle through the years of rapid growth to the city's present greatness. Other cities whose histories remain to be written—and St. Louis is one of them—may well wish for historians who can produce books as bright and valuable as these.

Fierce Indictment Of Nazi System

DEATH WITHOUT BATTLE. By Ludwig Renn. (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.)

A GREAT drama or novel will one day be written on the fantastic events of Hitler's rise and rule. Ludwig Renn, German war veteran, novelist and anti-Fascist, now a leader of the International Brigade in Spain, has shown the possibilities. His novel is swift-moving, broad in scope, written with fierce conviction, but a more distinguished successor from his own or another pen may confidently be expected.

The book is like a motion picture with flashes from news reels scattered through the scenario. All the great events of the Nazi conquest appear on the screen: the frenzied campaign, Hitler's negotiations for the chancellorship, the trial of the alleged conspirators, the blood purge, the Dollfuss assassination. All the shining lights of the Nazi hierarchy are seen: Hitler, Goering, Goebbels, Roehm, Heines and others.

Between these scenes, the novelist's characters play out their drama. They represent the various elements in the German tragedy, political and social, victors and vanquished, doubters and brutal careerists. There are so many of these characters, and their short scenes flash on and off with such rapidity, that the reader, if not alert, may become confused. The writer's failure to make living human beings of these characters is a major defect of the book.

The book is a burning indictment of the whole Nazi system. From the moral corruption of the higher ranks to the unspeakable horrors of the prisons and concentration camps, the effect is one of unearthly happenings in a nightmare. Over and over, the writer significantly has his people repeat the thought: If Adolf Hitler knew of these abuses, they would be ended. And then he has one of them demolish the whole "Leadership principle" on which the Third Reich stands, with these words:

"A Fuehrer who declares that he knows of everything, and yet lets the reins hang so loose that every petty Hitler can commit every possible crime of violence—such a 'Fuehrer' is a criminal even if he doesn't know what is going on. For it would be his duty to know it, and not merely open a new stretch of motor road every day."

Renn has given some unforgettable pictures, including some that the reader would prefer to forget, but he has only sketched in the panorama of a nation subdued by the forces of intolerance and violence.

CANYON OF GOLDEN SKULLS. By Bliss Lomax. (The Macaulay Co., New York.)

A FAST-ACTION Western, about Lance Runyan, a sheriff in the Anvil range country (where's that?), who discovered a mysterious canyon and its gold. The inevitable Girl is a Lulu, as usual.

Celebrates the Fine Art of Eating

M. F. K. FISHER

This Lady Knows Her Victuals

SERVE IT FORTH. By M. F. K. Fisher. (Harper & Bros., New York.)

WHATEVER your taste, "Serve It Forth" will stimulate your appetite and enliven your humor with its chatter about food, its preparation and its enjoyment through the ages. This is an unpretentious, conversational piece of writing, casual but coherent. Its neat, chronological plan is cleverly concealed in a web of anecdote and observation. Beginning with the year 3000 B. C., the book carries on through the centuries, dealing with the feasts of decadent Rome, the lusty days of Elizabethan England, the heyday of French elegance, and the shell-shock and partial coma of the twentieth century. Characters in the anecdotes are described with sure understanding.

Comments on the "ubiquitous potato" of our day, and "the social status of a vegetable" enliven the discussion. Curious fads and superstitions are unearthed, such as the superiority of a virgin nose for truffle hunting, and the brewing of cock-ale, which must be seasoned with the body of a dead rooster. With feminine adroitness Mrs. Fisher devotes the closing chapter of her book to the praise of Cesare, a village butcher, who, desired and sought after by women, also won the allegiance and companionship of all the men in his village through his unequaled ability to wine and dine them. Without protest she leaves the gastronomic laurels to the male of the species.

Mrs. Fisher has no ax to grind, but with the lift of an eyebrow and an occasional sly nudge, she points out the lethargic state of our sense of taste these days. She makes no effort to instruct her reader, but awakens in him a keener appreciation of eating as one of the lasting pleasures of life.

Old-Fashioned Common Sense

TAKE CARE OF YOURSELF. By Jerome W. Ephraim. (Simon & Schuster, New York.)

JEROME W. EPHRAIM is the modern counterpart of the old-fashioned druggist, dispenser of simple remedies and good common sense. He is undisturbed (except to express well founded disapproval) by current fads and the exaggerated claims made by manufacturers of miraculous cure-alls. He is not a doctor, but he is well fitted to prescribe for common aches and pains.

Ephraim is a young man who has created a name for himself in the study and manufacture of simple household remedies. Logan Clendening, in his introduction to Ephraim's book, observes: ". . . He is not to be classed simply as a debunker . . . exaggerated debunking is a vulgarity to which it is very easy to descend, and the more a person indulges in debunking, the more unfit he becomes for anything approaching the real truth . . ."

He tells us there are many things we must take with a grain of salt. Aspirin, for example, is an excellent anodyne, but it will not cure anything; bald pates can never sprout again, although falling hair may be checked. Your teeth cannot be safely made whiter—cleansing is all you should expect, and mouthwashes should be regarded as simply that and not as efficient germicides.

Going more deeply into the mysterious realm of cosmetics, Mr. Ephraim prescribes simple creams and powders, which do not possess magic and secret ingredients, and which will only keep one's complexion clean and healthful. Not forgetting the men, he includes a welcome chapter on how to make the morning shave more enjoyable.

Simple dietary rules are given, along with hints on overcoming sleeplessness. There is a revealing chapter entitled, "Your Hangover, and How Not to Have One" . . . proving that you can have your cake and eat it too, providing you do not ask for it a la mode.

SEES NO HUMAN PROGRESS, ONLY FLUCTUATION

SOCIAL AND CULTURAL DYNAMICS. By Pitrim A. Sorokin. Three Volumes (American Book Co., Chicago.)

PITRIM A. SOROKIN, socialist-revolutionary, thrice prisoner of the Tsar, statesman of the Kerensky regime, political exile from the USSR, and now an American citizen, has made an imposing attack on all theories of human progress in the comprehensive study of society here noted.

There is truth in the author's statement regarding his work when he says in the preface, ". . . The conclusions certainly deviate from the accepted current opinions . . . they are likely to be . . . assailed by all factions . . ." And further he says, "This, however, does not trouble me much." On the contrary, it is evident that Sorokin will be delighted if his conclusions do become the subject of bitter controversy, and his work suffers from his constant attempt to avoid agreeing with any of his predecessors or contemporaries.

In these three volumes he presents his theory that all societies fluctuate horizontally in varying lengths of time between two main cultures, and that such changes as have occurred in civilization have been merely changes in type. He classes all phases of civilization in two larger systems of culture created by opposing attitudes toward truth and reality. First is the "Sensate," characterized by a belief in the truth of the senses, considered inferior by the author. Second is the "Ideational," obviously favored by the author, which looks to the truth of faith. When, in a brief historical moment at a period of change, the two merge, there develops the superior Idealistic culture. Such a culture was that of Plato and Aristotle in Athens and the Scholasticism of Thomas Aquinas in the thirteenth century.

In the first volume, Sorokin traces the Sensate and Ideational influences upon the fluctuation of art forms. In this volume where he has little difficulty, since the fluctuation in art forms has been generally recognized, Sorokin lays the groundwork for establishing his theory. In volume two, dealing with systems of Truth, Law and Ethics, and in volume three dealing with Social Relationships, War and Revolution, he attempts to parallel the fluctuations in art forms. Upon science and invention, whose present day developments far exceed the hopes and dreams of Da Vinci, Watt, Pasteur, or even Edison, and seem to indicate limitless future advancement, Sorokin imposes his theory of fluctuation, discrediting the belief in progressive change.

Sorokin's Sensate and Ideational terms bear a very close resemblance to the common misconception of the terms materialist and idealist. Materialists are commonly thought of as people who are concerned only with the base realities of the world, such as money and how to get it. Idealists, on the other hand, are supposed to be people who hold to high ideals and codes of behavior. Actually, in philosopy, materialists are those who hold that material conditions are the prime movers of the world and give rise to all things, even to ideas themselves. Idealists, on the other hand, are those who believe that historical events spring from ideas and conceptions.

Sorokin, an idealist philosopher, has divided all history into periods when men are either "materialists" or "idealists" in the above mentioned sense of these terms.

Like many philosophers, Sorokin becomes so engrossed with his theories that in cases where history fails to bear him out he makes its pattern fit his theory.

Some of the errors he makes are astounding in view of the amazing mass of statistics which he has compiled. Nothing is unchartable to him. The tables showing the percentage and comparative types of nudity in art of all periods is classic.

Has an excellent statistician been lost to pseudo-philosophy?

A Holding Yarn of Life in China

YANGTZE SKIPPER. By Thomas Woodrooffe. (Sheridan House, New York.)

USUALLY when officialdom is discussed in lighter vein, the author feels constrained to force his humorous situations until he has little better than a burlesque. Perhaps Woodrooffe elaborates a trifle in "Yangtze Skipper" for effectiveness, but if he does, it is so authentically done that the situations and events themselves, and not merely the author's cleverness, seem amusing.

"Yangtze Skipper" is not, however, essentially a book of humor, even though it has a fair amount of comfortable chuckles. It is the story of Sub-Lieutenant Toby Warren of the British Navy, who on promotion from midshipman to Lieutenant asked to be assigned to some place where he could see the world. He drew the Beetle, a gunboat patrolling the Yangtze River in China, whose skipper was addicted to snipe-shooting on patrol and whisky drinking in port, but was withal a most capable chap when not seeing dragons and nonexistent junks about to be run down.

At Shanghai Toby had his first experience of the patient, toiling, rather hopeless Chinese. There he met the merchants, exploiters of the natives, who paid a dollar a year each for gunboat protection, boasted manfully and yelled for the patrol at the first sign of danger. There Toby ran afoul of social conventions by which the white man maintained his apparently precarious superiority, realizing how doubtful was his tenure without adequate martial backing.

But Lieut. Warren managed to have an interesting time of it, as when, being called to search a river boat for opium, he boarded the vessel at night in dramatic stealth to find the "murderous" Yankee Captain making merry in his cabin. A riot in Kiukiang sent the Beetle madly up the river to save the all-sacred Concession, which Toby and a handful of men did simply by getting the Chinese to laugh. Later he explored the Chinese section of the city. His account of the exploration presents an interesting picture of Chinese urban life — and civilization. Author Woodrooffe, who himself served in China, obviously sees the Chinese sympathetically. Even in telling of a feast for the Beetle's officers by a Chinese provincial Governor, there is no tendency to ridicule, unless his attitude toward the Governor's affectation of Christianity may be called such.

Missionaries, incidentally, were ever a trial for gunboat officers and British Consuls, since they constantly got themselves into trouble and had to be rescued, at any cost, for fear of international complications. On one occasion Changsha changed Governors, with the inevitable looting, and the Beetle was loaded to the gunwales with missionaries of all denominations. To prevent them from starting a miniature war on board, Toby had to keep them in constant fear of attacks from the shore.

After all the amusing adventures, the book ends on a tragic note. Capt. Blair is persuaded to quit saturating his system with whisky, is drenched while snipe-hunting and dies of pneumonia. Toby, having become attached to his appointment, is recalled to England.

Albanian Girl Tells Her Story

DAUGHTER OF THE EAGLE. By Nexhemie Zaimi. (Ives Washburn, Inc., New York.)

LIBERATED as recently as 1912 from 400 years of Turkish dominance, Albania, "Land of the Eagles," has stood aloof from the impress of modernity. Situated on the last fringe of Southeastern Europe, it looks out on the great waterways of the ancients, the Ionic and Adriatic seas. Rendered impregnable from serious foreign influence by their almost insular isolation (no railway penetrates Albania), the eagle people have clung to their traditional language, customs and institutions, heritage of 27 centuries of their known history.

As Nexhemie Zaimi, a Wellesley student and the first Albanian girl ever to come to this country by herself, tells her story of free Albania's first generation, she uses these inherited customs to show a way of living that will seem almost fantastic to a modern reader. In an intimate accounting of upper-class Mohammedan-Albanian family life, she shows, with humor and charm, that, however the means of expression may vary, human relationships are ever the same, the world over.

Nexhemie, ever a rebel against veiling and what it symbolized for Albanian women, was a quick convert to such influences from the Western world as came her way. Her viewpoint is a curious combination of the old superstitious beliefs and modern rational culture—the New Albanian in the making.

The kind of book that proves an ounce of understanding to be worth a pound of arbitration for the promotion of world peace, "Daughter of the Eagle" makes delightful reading. It is especially recommended for 'teen-age boys and girls.

Author of Widely Praised Story

MILLEN BRAND

Very Remarkable First Novel

THE OUTWARD ROOM. By Millen Brand. (Simon & Schuster, New York.)

THE action of this strange and very remarkable first novel begins in a mental hospital, to which Harriet Demuth had been committed seven years before as a result of her dearly loved older brother's death in an automobile accident, which is the more horrible to her because she blames her parents for it.

The doctors, despairing now of curing her, allow her to escape. She "rides the rods" halfway to the city, and a fugitive criminal gives her a lift in his car the rest of the way on condition that she claim to be his niece should they be stopped for questioning.

Arrived in New York, she is overwhelmed by the "unreality" of everything she sees, but instinct, in spite of the "death" in her, compels her to live. She pawns a ring, her brother's only gift; she looks for work. Then, for her last nickel, she rides the subway half the night. Sick with lack of sleep and food, she emerges into the street and enters an all-night restaurant from which she is about to be driven when John, a machine-shop worker, sees her plight and takes her home with him. Gradually, as she recovers strength, her mind begins to win back to normality. The two become lovers. John proposes marriage, but she refuses, thinking herself still insane. Then, when they have grown quite used to each other, he receives word that his brother has been killed in the mines. Sharing his sorrow, Harriet realizes she loves him, and her madness is over. She is "joined to the living."

That is all. But no bare narration can do more than suggest the fullness of this simple story. It would be easier to describe its tricks of craft than the subtle qualities which give it excellence.

Van Gogh Revealed In Letters

DEAR THEO: THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF VINCENT VAN GOGH. Edited by Irving Stone. (Houghton Mifflin Co., Boston.)

DURING the 17 years of near starvation and mental turmoil in the life of Vincent Van Gogh, he wrote almost daily letters to his brother, Theo; and because Theo was the one person on whom Vincent could always count for sympathy, these letters were unusually intimate and self-revealing. They were originally published in three volumes totaling well over 1600 pages. In the present volume, Irving Stone, the author of "Lust for Life," a fictional biography based on Van Gogh's life, has undertaken to condense the letters to readable proportions and yet to "keep every line Vincent wrote that has retained its beauty, significance, and importance, and to eliminate the countless pages of . . . comment which have lost both meaning and value."

Though Mr. Stone calls the result of this condensation an autobiography, it has far more interest for the reader as a character study. Considered as an autobiography, it is not comprehensive enough to be satisfying. Because of the fact, for instance, that Vincent and Theo were together in Paris and had no need for letters, there is practically no mention of that extremely important period when Van Gogh first came to know impressionism and widened his circle of acquaintances to include Seurat, Signac, Lautrec, and above all, Gauguin.

As a study of a most unusual personality, with no "washing over" of its weaknesses and no "painting in" of its strength, these letters leave little to be desired. Written as they were in periods of emotional stress as well as in periods of comparative serenity, they reveal, far better than anything written by another hand possibly could, this figure so pitiably at odds during most of his life with his fellowmen.

In Mr. Stone's opinion Van Gogh "was as great a writer and philosopher as he was a painter," and assuredly these letters which he has collected seem to bear out his contention.

Life Among Hopis Eighty Years Ago

RHYTHM FOR RAIN. By John Louw Nelson. (Houghton Mifflin Co., Boston.)

THE American Indian has always been an enigma to the white man. Many have essayed to write of him, in most cases creating pictures sentimental, romantic, or luridly evil. Today we find a new attitude, significant of the growing maturity of American scholarship, toward the customs and folklore of the red man.

John Louw Nelson's "Rhythm for Rain" is an interesting addition to material dealing with the natives of the Southwest. Mr. Nelson, who is Director of Research with the Museum of the American Indian Heye Foundation, has spent more than eight years with the Hopi of Arizona observing their customs, entering into their tribal life, and listening to their traditions. This study has resulted in the creation of a brilliantly colored panorama of Indian life 80 years ago.

Here is the story of a whole village, of the ceremonies attending birth and death, of the mysteries of initiation, and of the thrilling festivities marked by the dancing of the Katchinas, men who represented the gods and by sympathetic magic aided nature to fulfill her functions. A climax is reached in the description of the historic drouth during which time the angry spirits withheld rain for three years. Famine blighted the land bringing misery and forcing the people to barter their children to the Spanish in return for food and water.

Wisely Mr. Nelson has avoided melodrama and complexity of plot. This is the story not of individuals but of a people. The simplicity of treatment has enabled the author to present a clear study of the savage mind. The Indian believes in the virtues of dignity, faith, and integrity. He is capable of boisterous gaiety and stoical resignation. He lives close to nature in a world composed half of realities and half of magic dreams. An effective bit of psychological analysis is to be found in the description of the passing of the boy Kwayeshva's childish belief in the actuality of the Katchinas to the deeper faith in the spirits of which the dancers are but symbols.

Mr. Nelson is to be commended for his careful research, for his sympathetic approach to his subject, and for the restraint with which he has handled his material.

Not That Many Will Care Much

MILTON AND WORDSWORTH: POETS AND PROPHETS. By Sir Herbert J. C. Grierson. (The Macmillan Co., New York.)

JOHN MILTON, like other men of positive character and great achievement, has, in recent years, been the object of attack and scorn. Gerald Manley Hopkins wrote that "he was a very bad man," and Hilaire Belloc has tried to prove him a man damned and lost. To a young school of critics, led by T. S. Eliot, Milton's poetry is "stiff and tortuous," prosaic and artificial.

In these lectures, given at Johns Hopkins last year, Prof. Grierson comes to Milton's defense. He acknowledges that Milton was stern and unyielding. He concedes even that "he was a Bolshevist in virtue alike of his intolerant temperament and his confident intellectualism." Yet he insists that in "Lycidas," "Paradise Lost" and "Samson Agonistes" there is austere music; that their passion for noble thought, though it may not justify God's ways, is admirably prophetic and entitles them to stand alongside Jeremiah and Ezekiel.

Any lover of poetry will take far more from this book than a new respect for Milton and Wordsworth. Prof. Grierson, wise and old in such discussion, packs every sentence with good reasoning on poetry and its philosophy.

Genial Bob Davis In Canada

CANADA CAVALCADE. By Robert H. Davis. (D. Appleton-Century Co., New York.)

WITH characteristic geniality, Robert H. Davis tells of Canadian adventures, not only those he has experienced himself, but also those of which he has heard from acquaintances in Canada. He has a knack for making friends with all sorts of people and inducing them to talk—whether they be retired British army officers or transplanted Cockney taxicab drivers, small boy guides or septuagenarian backwoodsmen. By keeping his ears open and by using, on occasion, a little judicious questioning, he learns many things from these individuals.

The present travelogue is concerned very little with the geography of our northern neighbor; it is a series of sketches about the people of that land, and about their animals, wild and domestic. Excellent for continued reading, the book can be particularly recommended for browsing purposes. It abounds in interesting material for a variety of persons—essay or short story addicts, wild life enthusiasts, travelers who are attracted by the homely as well as the exotic, and all who rejoice in the thought of the friendly feeling between Canada and the United States.

Knows Only Cains And Abels

THE STRIKERS. By Goetze Jeter. (Frederick A. Stokes Co., New York.)

THE employe of a small-town shoe factory find themselves locked out after a sit-down called to protest the discharge of a union member. Farland, union leader, organizes a picket line and prepares for a siege.

As the strike wears on, business men of the town, their profits sadly depleted, grow restive, and one of the most aggressive and belligerent of their number browbeats the weak-willed Mayor into sending for a representative of the shoe company. This Machiavellian yet genial individual traps snarling and beady-eyed Farland into confessing, in the presence of a public stenographer, that he will not lead his cohorts back into the factory on the company's own terms. When this inexplicable behavior is revealed to the strikers they form a mob and string their erstwhile leader to a tree limb, leaving him "a gangling, flapping thing . . . a grim gargoyle . . . . a squirming, gurgling pendulum."

It now appears that the workers had no actual grievance against the company to begin with, but they have been misled by malevolent Farland. They troop happily back to work. Nevertheless, Alice, "deep" wife of Striker John, is sure that it will happen again, for man is prone to dissatisfaction, and nothing ever really ends in life. John realizes that as long as there are Cains (read union organizers and dissatisfied employes) left in the world, and innocent Abels (read dupes of union organizers), content with what they have, to embitter and provoke these insatiable Cains, strife will not cease.

Mr. Jeter displays descriptive power when he concerns himself with the minutiae of small-town existence; a factory boy badgered by his parents for a larger share of his check, young love in a moonlit pasture, cafe hangers-on robbing a pop truck, drinking, fighting. When the more vital issues at stake are under consideration, he frequently becomes merely hortatory and introduces characters who serve solely as vehicles for his own rather emphatic views. It may be argued, of course, that any tendentious novel must perforce reflect the convictions of its author, but the successful evangelist in fiction presents his thesis in flesh-and-blood symbols not too obviously manipulated by the author-puppeteer.

Novels of passionate conviction have in the past served as molders of opinion. A notable example is Emile Zola's "Germinal," in which the author, by his understanding of social forces and human character, made a strike live. Zola's perception is of the sort Mr. Jeter needs to cultivate.

Investment Advice For Laymen

SEVEN KINDS OF INFLATION. By Richard Dana Skinner. (Whittlesey House, New York.)

IN the past few years repeated inflation scares have caused violent fluctuations in prices. At such times the layman is bewildered. He does not know what investment policy to follow. Experts disagree, and politicians frighten him by pointing out the horrors resulting from monetary inflation. The purpose of this timely book, written by a well-known investment adviser, is to aid the layman in formulating sound investment policies by showing him how he can determine for himself the kind and extent of inflation.

Mr. Skinner attempts to clarify the problem by indicating the supply and demand factor which causes fluctuations in bond prices, stock prices, short-term interest rates, general prices, debts compared with national wealth, interest payments compared with national income, and living costs with income. He shows how by analyzing weekly bank reports the layman can determine fairly accurately the present state of the market. This information, he emphasizes over and over again, is not sufficient to forecast; it is only indicative of present conditions.

In the last chapters of the book the author analyzes modern capitalism. He asserts that it is a "house divided" and he foresees the end of the capitalistic system if "creditorship capitalism" continues to dominate "ownership capitalism." To remedy this situation he suggests a non-debt banking system. Financing is to be carried on as an equity operation, and the contraction of debt prohibited.

Unlike most books written for him, the layman can both use and understand this one. The various indexes are simple since they are designed so that the layman can construct them himself; yet, they are quite accurate and correlate fairly well with more carefully developed series. Likewise, the interpretation of this data is generally correct.

Since most economists recognize that debt financing does delay the adjustment of the economic system to changing conditions, this provocative suggestion for its elimination merits further study.

MAIN BOND SECTIONS DRIFT LOWER QUIETLY

Largely Inactive Through Week Due to Interest in Capital Market.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 26.—The capital market usurped the place of the bond market as the center of interest for investment circles this week. Inactivity of listed issues was accompanied by gradually lowering prices.

New offerings, however, totaled roughly $130,000,000, face value, which was in the neighborhood of aggregate flotations the preceding week and substantially heavier than two weeks ago.

Unless disturbing influences develop over the week-end, dealers look for the sale of $95,000,000 of Union Electric Co. of Missouri obligations early next week. This flotation, made up of bonds and notes, has moved ou tof registration. In addition to this and other offerings, the money market will be asked to absorb several large stock issues.

In the listed market light offerings found takers only at concessions and the main body of bonds drifted lower with utilities taking the most punishment. Several times the Associated Press averages for 10 such liens declined to new low ground since the summer of 1935. The 20 rails reached their lowest level in nearly a year.

U. S. Governments were quiet and a little lower, while foreigns moved uncertainly on fears of international complications over the Spanish war.

Sales for the week were less than $35,500,000, face amount, against more than $42,500,000 the week before.

Slightly Lower Prices for Many Issues at Closing Session.

Slightly lower prices ruled in a large section of the bond market today. Railroad loans were off rather sharply, considering lightness of dealings. The Associated Press averages for 20 carriers fell .2 of a point to 91.9, the lowest since June 8, 1936.

Low yield corporate issues also declined, the average for this group dipping .1 of a point to 110.3. Other domestic groups were even and the foreign averages improved a mite.

Transactions totaled $4,561,000, face value, for all bonds compared with $2,910,000 a week ago.

U. S. Governments were quiet, with swings held to minor fractions. Prices ranged to about 3-32 of a point on the downside. A few loans improved a trifle.

Alleghany stamped 5s lost 1¾ to 59 for one of the heaviest setbacks in the rail list. Baltimore & Ohio 4½s declined ½ to 69½ and Northwestern 4¾s had a like decline at 14½. St. Paul 5s of 1975 dropped 1⅛ to 22½. New York Central 3¼s lowered ¾ to 106¼.

Western Union bonds lost a little as did Postal Telegraph and Third Avenue Railway issues.

Brazilian obligations improved impressively as conversations started looking toward increase of payments on the defaulted dollar loans. Colombian 6s also made headway.

WASHINGTON BUSINESS NOTES

WASHINGTON, June 26.—The Commerce Department reports an increase in inquiries from foreign countries regarding American goods. It says that Austria, France, Australia, Italy, Mexico, Lithuania and Egypt are among countries from which specific inquiries have been received.

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce says retail automobile financing in May increased 5 per cent over April, 9 per cent over May, 1936, and 61 per cent over May, 1935.

Treasury statistics show production of cigarettes totaled 13,069,936,403 during May, compared with 12,024,856,900 in the same month last year.

Business advices to the Commerce Department from representatives in foreign countries include:

Netherlands—Trade concessions to other Oslo states to be extended to United States, Germany and Great Britain.

Bulgaria—Foreign trade increases.

Boston Wool Market.

BOSTON, June 26.—(U. S. Dept. of Agriculture)—Because of the inability to make immediate deliveries of wool from the Boston market on account of the strike, mill buying for current needs was shut off during the past week. However, buyers continued to look around for wools they may need later, but they made few commitments.

Despite the lack of trading, there was a fairly confident undertone regarding prices and quotations were unchanged on spot wools. Graded combing Ohio fleeces were quoted nominally at 40@42c in the grease for fine Delaine, at 42@43c for staple combing half blood, at 43@44c for ⅜ blood and at 42@43c for ¼ blood.

COTTON QUIET AND STEADY, TWO HIGHER TO ONE LOWER

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 26.—Cotton was quiet and steady today, with traders showing little inclination to extend commtiments over the week-end. October sold from 12.26 to 12.18, but recovered to close at 12.24, with final prices 2 points net higher to 1 lower.

Opening prices were 1 to 4 points lower, under scattered liquidation and local selling, incfluenced by a favorable view of the weather, but prices soon rallied slightyl on trade buying and covering.

Next week's forcast poitned to generally fair conditions in central and western belts, except for sccatered showers in the Southeast.

Returns on yesterday's July notices revealed that co-operative interests stopped the bulk of the 8300 bales involved. July wnt to a premium of 2 points over October at the close.

Cotton on shipboard awaiting clearance at close of week was estimated at 37,000 bales, against 53,000 last year and 60,000 two years ago.

Memphis Spot Cotton.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., June 26.—Spot cotton had a steady tone. Middling closed at 12.35c, unchanged from yesterday. Sales amounted to 148 bales.

Early Rallies Fail and Shares Wind Up the Week With Rails And Steels Leading Decline

Steel Strike and European Political and Financial Tension Offset Favorable Factors in Stock Trading.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 26.—The stock market balanced good news against bad during the week. Early rallying tendencies failed to last. Gains and losses were rather mixed for the period, with steel and rails leading a slow downward movement in the closing short session.

On no day did the turnover reach 600,000 shares—just half the 1,200,000 Wall Street considers necesary to enable brokerage houses to break even.

Traders, watching steel strike developments, political tension in Europe and the French franc, held off, for the most part, to await a turn in events. Offsetting unfavorable factors, however, were reports of an increased volume of wholesale and retail trade, a less than seasonal decline in steel bookings, despite labor troubles, and a more than seasonal loading of freight cars.

Rails suffered a trifle toward the end of the week when reports indicated May net income had dwindled, due to higher costs, although gross had improved.

Brokers took some heart for a time from the resistance of steels, mainly engendered by hope the Mediation Board might be able to do something toward ending the strike. Toward the end of the week, however, weakness of the rails spread to the steel division and moderate recessions resulted.

Events in Europe appeared to have a mixed effect. Coppers, rubbers and some other shares enjoyed a mild mid-week rally.

In general the stock market's effort at recovery covered relatively small ground, although at the top the Associated Press average of 60 shares showed considerable betterment over the low mark set on the March-June decline about a week ago.

Sales during the week amounted to 2,923,150 shares, compared with 5,107,442 a week ago and 5,791,220 a year ago. Total sales from Jan. 1 to date were 226,765,652 shares, compared with 259,162,035 a year ago and 124,837,735 two years ago.

Brief Closing Session Sluggish; Some Rails Low for Year.

Prices slipped downward in a sluggish stock market today, unsupported by anything except a perfunctory buying interest. Leading shares lost from fractions to a point or more, with a few issues sagging even more. Rails were under the most persistent pressure and some finished at new lows for the year.

At the close, the Associated Press average of 15 carrier stocks was down 1.1 points at 37 from yesterday's close, a new minimum level since Dec. 23, 1936; for 60 stocks the figure was 63.6, off .7 of a point from the previous close.

Turnover amounted to only 288,240 shares, little better than the 220,950 of last Saturday. Tickers were silent for moments at a time as bids and offers lagged at the trading posts.

Steel shares sagged, although to a lesser degree than the rails.

Coppers were resistant for part of the session in sympathy with an improved tone on the London metal market, but later support failed and most shares in this section slipped.

Likewise, better off than the carriers, but still under yesterday's closing level, were merchandising, amusement, utility and tobacco shares. The oils, also, shaded fractionally.

Most active of all was New York Central, which finished off 1⅜ at 35⅝ for a new low for the year. Pennsylvania, which closed at 35⅞, and Northern Pacific at 27⅛, touched 1937 bottoms. Other carriers to dip included Santa Fe, 75; Atlantic Coast, 49¾, Southern Railway, 27½, and Southern Pacific, 42⅞.

Losses in Other Divisions.

Conspicuous losers in other divisions were United States Steel, 97; Bethlhem, 82¼; Chrysler, 99⅝; American Telephone, 162½; Western Union, 44⅛; American Smelting, 83; Cerro de Pasco, 64; Kennecott, 56½; Allis Chalmers, 58; du Pont, 151½; and Liggett & Myers "B," 95½.

In a narrower range were Douglas Aircraft, 56½; Goodyear, 37⅝; Consolidated Edison, 32¾; Standard Oil of New Jersey, 65½; and Texas Corp., 58½.

The spot franc, supported by French official control, advanced .00⅞ of a cent at 4.46¼ cents, but pessimism over the outcome of the French financial crisis was reflected in a widenning of the 90-day forward discount to .37 of a cent. Sterling slipped ⅜ of a cent at $4.93½.

Bonds were inactive and lower with the exception of some South American issues, bolstered by the beginning of negotiations for a new agreement on servicing the Brazilian dollar debt.

Wheat at Chicago finished ⅜ to 1 cent lower, while corn was mixed, ⅞ off to 1 cent up. Cotton futures closed 5 cents a bale lower to 10 cents higher.

INDUSTRIAL ACTIVITY 3.8 UNDER MID-MAY

Unchanged for Third Consecutive Week; Higher Than Same Period Year Ago.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 26.—Industrial activity remained unchanged this week for the third consecutive week, 3.8 per cent under the recovery high reached in mid-May.

The Associated Press seasonally adjusted index this week at 104.5 per cent of the 1929-30 average, equaled the previous week, but was substantially higher than the 91.3 reported in the same week a year ago.

Increases and decreases among component indices balanced, three gaining and three slipping.

With several General Motors' plants back in operation following strike shut-downs, automobile output turned in a contra-seasonal upturn.

Steel operations, on the other hand, slumped to new low ground for the year as the result of strikes. The partial paralysis in this industry has not seriously affected railroad carloadings. Freight shipments did better than normally would be expected at this season, due mainly to a sharp expansion in grain movement.

Cotton manufacturing yielded slightly.

The index, with its seasonally adjusted components based on the latest available statistics, and with 1929-30 as 100, compared as follows:

	Latest Week	Prev. Week.	Year. Ago.

MEN'S CLOTHING BUSINESS; REPORT ON MAY SALES

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, June 26.—The men's clothing business so far this year has come up to the expectations of conservatives within the industry, a reliable nation-wide survey indicated today.

Clothing dealers experienced a mild recession in April but then a strong revival in May, according to the survey.

A good majority of the National Association of Retail Clothers and Furnishers' business committee, representing men's apparel merchants in all sections of the country, reported business gains in May ranged up to 15 per cent over those of May, 1936. Sixty-one per cent of the reporting merchants said May business improved over a year ago, 12 per cent said it was as good and 27 per cent reported declines averaging 12 per cent.

Seventy-seven per cent of the merchants reported May business showed an average improvement of almost 15 per cent compared with April while only 11 per cent reported a decline averaging 11 per cent, and 12 per cent indicated volume was unchanged.

GIFT TAX RECEIPTS FAR BELOW ESTIMATE FOR YEAR TO DATE

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 26.—For the first 11 months of the fiscal period ending June 30, the gift tax provided only $21,738,000, compared with $159,655,000 in the same period last year. The estimate for the entire 12 months of this year was $110,000,000. Offiicals say receipts from the gift tax are the most difficult of all to estimate, because no one can tell how many persons may make gifts in any period, or how large gifts will be.

UPSWING IN EXPORT COPPER; TIN STRONG

Steel Ingot Production Declines; Lead Steady; Zinc Unchanged.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 26.—An upswing in the price of export copper enlivened the non-ferrous metals this week. Opening at a parity of about 13.55 cents, c. i. f., the usual European base ports, the price receded slightly on Wednesday, but had recovered sufficiently by the week-end to rule at a 10-point premium over domestic copper at a 14.10-cents-a-pound parity.

It was the first time in three weeks that the domestic price ruled under the foreign quotation. The reason for the bulge abroad was seen in the heavy speculative demand based on a disturbed political situation.

The outlook for the American price was seen as only steady, since producers are concerned over the prospects for heavy world production during the next six months. New labor troubles in the smelting industry were also a subject for uncertainty of trend.

Strength of tin was likewise a feature. Rising from 55⅛ cents on Monday to 57⅜ cents at the close of the market was responsive to further speculative buying in London and in the Far East.

Steel ingot production declined 2 points to 75 per cent of capacity. The volume of new orders was said to be dwindling. New pig iron business was spotty.

Lead was steady despite advances at London. Sentiment was improving as a result of generally better bookings and the improved inquiry from such lines as cable makers and brass mills, recently quiet.

Zinc was unchanged, and the rise in England removed for the moment the problem of foreign competition in principal American consuming districts.

PRESSURE ON FRANC; LOSS FOR STERLING

French Financial Situation and British Stabilization Fund—Exchange Rates.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 26.—Heavy pressure on the franc, arising from the French financial crisis, marked the week in foreign exchange dealings. While the official control intervened to bolster the currency at its recent level, pessimism was revealed in forward sales, where the discount for 90-day quotations was more than 1-3 of a cent at times.

Other European currencies held to narrow fluctuations, the quietness of trading offsetting nervousness over international tension.

Gold engagements abroad for American account continued heavy, with $29,620,000 taken for shipment here. In the London free market offerings increased, and Sir John Simon, British Chancellor of the Exchequer, announced another £200,000,000 was needed by the stabilization fund, which had been forced to buy huge quantities of the yellow metal.

Of the gold engaged for this country, $18,519,000 was taken in England. Japan was again a heavy contributor with a total of $4,800,000 and Canada earmarked $4,216,000. India and Holland made comparatively light shipments.

Closing Exchange Rates.

Further widening of the discount rate on future francs was attributed to fresh rumors of devaluation. The spot quotation, however, was bolstered by operations of the official control board.

Pound sterling lost ⅜ of a cent to close at $4.93½. The franc gained .00⅞ of a cent to 4.46¼. Ninety-day francs were quoted at a discount of .37 of a cent. Holland guilders and the belga gained .00⅛ of a cent each.

In London the dollar added 3-16 of a cent to end at 4.93 11-16 to the pound against the overnight New York rate of 4.93⅞. Paris markets were closed.

Gold engaged abroad today included $3,781,000 in England and $976,000 in Canada, according to the Federal Reserve

UPSWING IN EXPORT COPPER; TIN STRONG

Steel Ingot Production Declines; Lead Steady; Zinc Unchanged.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 26.—An upswing in the price of export copper enlivened the non-ferrous metals this week. Opening at a parity of about 13.55 cents, c. i. f., the usual European base ports, the price receded slightly on Wednesday, but had recovered sufficiently by the week-end to rule at a 10-point premium over domestic copper at a 14.10-cents-a-pound parity.

It was the first time in three weeks that the domestic price ruled under the foreign quotation. The reason for the bulge abroad was seen in the heavy speculative demand based on a disturbed political situation.

The outlook for the American price was seen as only steady, since producers are concerned over the prospects for heavy world production during the next six months. New labor troubles in the smelting industry were also a subject for uncertainty of trend.

Strength of tin was likewise a feature. Rising from 55⅛ cents on Monday to 57⅜ cents at the close of the market was responsive to further speculative buying in London and in the Far East.

Steel ingot production declined 2 points to 75 per cent of capacity. The volume of new orders was said to be dwindling. New pig iron business was spotty.

Lead was steady despite advances at London. Sentiment was improving as a result of generally better bookings and the improved inquiry from such lines as cable makers and brass mills, recently quiet.

Zinc was unchanged, and the rise in England removed for the moment the problem of foreign competition in principal American consuming districts.

PRESSURE ON FRANC; LOSS FOR STERLING

French Financial Situation and British Stabilization Fund—Exchange Rates.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 26.—Heavy pressure on the franc, arising from the French financial crisis, marked the week in foreign exchange dealings. While the official control intervened to bolster the currency at its recent level, pessimism was revealed in forward sales, where the discount for 90-day quotations was more than 1-3 of a cent at times.

Other European currencies held to narrow fluctuations, the quietness of trading offsetting nervousness over international tension.

Gold engagements abroad for American account continued heavy, with $29,620,000 taken for shipment here. In the London free market offerings increased, and Sir John Simon, British Chancellor of the Exchequer, announced another £200,000,000 was needed by the stabilization fund, which had been forced to buy huge quantities of the yellow metal.

Of the gold engaged for this country, $18,519,000 was taken in England. Japan was again a heavy contributor with a total of $4,800,000 and Canada earmarked $4,216,000. India and Holland made comparatively light shipments.

Closing Exchange Rates.

Further widening of the discount rate on future francs was attributed to fresh rumors of devaluation. The spot quotation, however, was bolstered by operations of the official control board.

Pound sterling lost ⅜ of a cent to close at $4.93½. The franc gained .00⅞ of a cent to 4.46¼. Ninety-day francs were quoted at a discount of .37 of a cent. Holland guilders and the belga gained .00½ of a cent each.

In London the dollar added 3-16 of a cent to end at 4.93 11-16 to the pound against the overnight New York rate of 4.93⅞. Paris markets were closed.

Gold engaged abroad today included $3,781,000 in England and $976,000 in Canada, according to the Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

Closing rates follow: Great Britain in dollars, others in cent. Great Britain, demand, 4.93½; cables, 4.93½; 60-day bills 4.93¾. France, demand 4.46¼; cables, 4.46¼. Italy, demand 5.26½; cables, 5.26½.

LONDON, June 26.—United States dollars continued higher today. At the close of foreign exchange trading, the American unit was up 3-16 of a cent at 4.93 11-16 to the pound against $4.93⅞ for sterling in New York over night.

FOOD LEADS RALLY IN COMMODITY PRICES

Industrial Staples Give Ground; Week's Index Gain Over Previous Period.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 26.—Commodity prices on the whole rallied this week from the year's low point reached during the preceding period.

Farm products and food led the upward turn, while industrial staples continued to give ground before the combined pressure of light demand and increasing supplies.

The Associated Press weighted index of 35 important wholesale commodity prices jumped from 89.01 per cent of the 1926 low to 90.21. This compared with 73.75 a year ago.

Although grain markets swung erratically, responding to equally eccentric weather and crop condition reports, the close for corn, wheat and rye at the week-end was substantially above the preceding week. Cotton also managed to eke out a small gain.

The rapid advance in wheat reflected widespread drouth in parts of Canada, giving prospect of a sizable reduction in the Dominion's final outturn, and rust in this country's spring cereal belt.

Quotations for livestock bounded forward to within striking distance of the year's top, having withstood the deflation of the past month better than any other group. Hogs, cattle and lambs concurred in the upswing, as trade quarters responded to official notices heavy sales early this spring and the reduced cost of feed would push prices up later in the year.

Items for the market basket advanced under the leadership of flour and lard, strong demand for these staples meeting a comparatively limited spot inventory position. Eggs and cocoa also moved up, while coffee slipped back nominally.

Textiles slumped to a new low for the year as cotton cloth weakened further. Inventories continued to pile up, analysts said, and the industry made no move to cut production in face of slackening demand. Silk, however, recovered slightly.

Hides, rubber, bituminous coal and antimony were lower, while tin, turpentine and burlap improved.

PROFIT-SELLING CLIPS CENT OFF PRICE OF WHEAT

Net Loss at Chicago Closing Session of Week From 3-8ths Up — Corn's Showing Better.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, June 26.—Buying momentum that lifted wheat prices almost 4 cents yesterday evaporated today, leaving the pit at the mercy of profit-taking and commercial selling to prevent marketing losses that beat values back down more than a cent at times.

Wheat closed with a net loss of ⅜@1 cent for the day, July $1.15⅝@½, September $1.16⅛@⅜, December $1.18¼@½, and corn was ⅞c off to 1 cent up, July new $1.23½@¾, September $1.08⅞@1.09, December 79⅞c. Oats gained ⅛@1⅛c, July 42⅝@¾c. Rye was unchanged to ⅞c off, July 87⅝c, and lard gained 5 to 15 cents.

Erratic Fluctuations.

The market had a day of erratic price fluctuations. Profit-takers rushed to sell at the opening to take advantage of gains of 12 to 13 cents a bushel since the market touched its low early this month. Then, when this liquidation dried up, rallies took values fractionally above Friday's close, but another burst of selling carried the market down about 2 cents from the day's high. A final rally of a cent occurred before the last bell.

The wheat pit was called upon to digest the usual run of drouth complaints from Western Canada and rust and grasshopper reports from crop experts examining domestic grain but advices received by a leading commission house indicated grain trade sentiment in the Northwest held to the belief that the United States spring wheat belt as a whole was slowly but surely rounding out one of the best crops in several seasons.

Factors checking buyers' enthusiasm in wheat included declines of more than 2 cents in Kansas City and Minneapolis values at times and corresponding losses at Winnipeg, although the Canadian market closed at small net gains. Then, too, cooler weather northwest minimized drouth conditions in parts of Canada and worked against the spread of rust this side of the border.

There was no sign of immediate relief in drouth sections of Canada, however, and, according to dispatches, the European political situation was still critical. Liverpool and Rotterdam wheat rose more than 2 cents and more than 3 cents, respectively, largely reflecting Friday advances in North America.

On the Selling Side.

Houses with Southwestern connections were on the selling side in the Chicago market.

Strength in July and September corn was associated with statements that only 138,000 bushels of contract corn were stored in Chicago public elevators. Favorable crop prospects caused the weakness in December. Oats followed corn and rye paralleled wheat.

Provisions rallied in sympathy with corn and with higher hog values this week.

Wheat futures purchases yesterday totaled 60,875,000 bushels, corn 14,695,000 bushels. Open interest in wheat was 86,993,000 bushels and in corn 34,328,000.

ST. LOUIS MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE, June 26.—Wheat futures closed lower today. July finished at $1.13⅞, off 1¼c, and September at $1.14⅞, down 1⅛c. Corn finished ¼c lower at 79½c for December.

Liverpool wheat opened 2¼@2¾d higher and closed 1⅞@2⅛d up.

Winnipeg wheat started ½c lower to ⅛c higher. The close was ⅛@⅜c higher.

Argentine wheat opened 1@1⅛c lower and corn net unchanged. Wheat closed ½c higher and corn ⅛@¼c up.

Local wheat receipts which were 22,500 bu. compared with 16,500 a week ago and 7500 a year ago, included 12 cars local and three through. Corn receipts which were 15,000 bu. compared with 33,000 a week ago and 69,000 a year ago, included nine cars local and one through. Oats receipts which were 20,000 bu. compared with 8000 a week ago and 8000 a year ago, included nine cars local and one through.

Anecdotes of Life in Germany Showing People's Reactions to Jew-Baiting and Nazi Officialdom

Many Germans Unaware of True Facts of Persecutions — Leaders Subjects of Private If Not Public Lampooning.

By OTTO FUERBRINGER, Of the Post-Dispatch Staff.

ONE of the men I met in Germany told me why he had left the Nazi party. He had been a Nazi long before Hitler came to power and, although not a professional party member, stood high in the movement. But he had a Jewish family physician and, after the Nazis were in the saddle, his chiefs told him to give up this doctor. He thought it over for a while and then told his superiors: "To be German means to be faithful and thankful. This has nothing to do with race or with blood. This man has been our doctor for 20 years, has seen my children through all their sicknesses, and I intend to keep him." He then resigned from the party.

Now in America when a man tells professional polititicians where to get off it may, if he has the ambition to hold office, be political suicide. It is rarely anything more. But in present-day Germany it is an act of great personal courage. I thought it such and told other Germans about it, but I don't remember any of them agreeing with me. They all either said the man was a fool, or in a sickening, knowing fashion asked: "Would the Jew have done the same for him?"

Germans Don't Get All of Facts.

The Germans talk less about the Jewish persecutions than about any of the other acts of violence committed by the Nazis. A Berlin correspondent told me he thought there would be far fewer Nazi sympathizers in Germany if all of the Germans knew all of the facts about the anti-Jewish drives. But they don't.

What they get in their papers is a monstrous combination of distortions, lies, venom, and hoary, standard anti-Semitic attacks. One of the papers, while I was there, resurrected a silly speech of Benjamin Franklin's on "the danger of Jews to America." What they really know about the question they have to get from private conversation. But it seemed to me they conversed and knew very little about it. Almost invariably, when I asked a German about the Jewish persecutions, he would say: "Oh, that's greatly exaggerated. There may have been a few milk beatings, but nothing more." When I would protest and say that it was well established that there was a good deal more than "mild beatings," they would say: "Well, perhaps. But they had it coming to them." Why did they have it coming to them? They didn't say why, they just maintained that they knew.

Some are Ashamed.

Perhaps it is shame that causes so few Germans other than the active anti-Semites to talk about the German Jews—and there are those who are openly ashamed of the persecution. But there is more to it than that. The tragic fact is that for many Germans, even excluding the avowed Jew-haters, the damning and chasing out of the Jews has provided a handy way of temporarily easing one's conscience. When the Government and the press and the movies daily blame the Jews for the plight of the German Republic before 1933, it is difficult for the average German not to fall in line and think the same thing. When there is no public voice which can be raised against it, only the most forthright and honest protest, even privately, against changing a social prejudice into a national policy of persecution.

But if the Germans I talked with were close-lipped about their own anti-Semitism, they were curious as to what it was like in America. The questioners fell into two classes: those who wanted to relieve their own feelings of guilt and those who were looking for any scrap of information to "prove" their already-formed theory that "anti-Semitism as a governmental policy" would sweep America within 20 years. I must have given both classes little comfort, except when I said that I had been at summer resorts where Jews lived in one section of the town and non-Jews in another, or where there were two hotels and where it was understood that nobody of one race went to the hotel occupied by the other. They seized on this, each for their own interpretation, and said such had not been the case in Germany as short as 10 years ago.

Anti-Jewish Propaganda.

A manual on Jews in Nazi Germany prepared by an American Jewish committee states that Jews had attained "theoretical if not practical equality" in Germany by 1919. And the way in which the Germans were weaned away from this ideal is, of course, explained by the violence of the anti-Jewish propaganda. The sad fact is that this propaganda—ludicrous as it is in extreme forms as, for instance, the attempt to prove that Christ wasn't a Jew—has had its effect. And in extreme and curious ways. As an example: I met one family with several young daughters whose minds and opinions had been so twisted by propaganda that they refused to allow one daughter to accept an invitation to visit a French friend because of the harm which they "knew" would come to her at the hands of Jews and Communists. It was needless to ask if they were serious about it. They were in dead earnest.

The center of the most violent anti-semitism is in Franconia, around the old town of Nuremberg, where Julius Streicher, the most vicious of the Jew-baiters lives. He boasts now that he has run all Jews out of a large surrounding area, but when I was in Nuremberg I was told a story of what happened one night before all the Jews were gone. Streicher had found a girl in a cafe talking with a Jew. Incensed, he grabbed the girl away, stood her up on a table, and rapping for attention with his riding crop, cried out: "This girl dares associate with a Jew." He dragged her from cafe to cafe, repeating his performance in each place, until the girl fainted from exhaustion and fright.

In Bavaria many restaurants and cafes had signs on their doors which said: "Jews are not welcome." But in Nuremberg the signs read: "Jews are forbidden to enter." It seemed incredible to me that there has not been more angry revenge on the part of the Jews. Even excepting the physical violence of some of the persecutions, it was difficult to believe that the Jews, who find it impossible to enter almost any public place, who find themselves accused as traitors on corner billboards and attacked daily in the press, who are the villains of any movie with a contemporary theme, should be so long-suffering.

Automobile Show Propaganda.

I had an example myself of how effective propaganda—in another and really quite harmless field—can be. While I was still in Munich, the automobile show opened in Berlin and daily the papers were filled with glorious descriptions of it. Hitler had opened the show and all the big Nazis had made their visits to it. I took a leisurely 10 days to go from Munich to Berlin and in all the little towns people were talking about the show and the papers were still bringing stories and pictures. I have never been to an automobile show in America, because I'm certain I would be bored. But Hitler is out to motorize Germany, and so insistent was his propaganda in connection with the show that when I got to Berlin it was one of the first things I wanted to see. I had imagined something brilliant and dynamic, but it turned out even more boring to me than I had, in the days before I had been excited by the propaganda, thought possible.

Humor at Nazis' Expense.

But the propaganda sometimes miscarries. And it fails entirely to touch or influence the really astonishing number of political jokes or gibes at the Government current in Germany. The jokes are not printed, of course, and only very rarely are they recited from the stage.

A comedian at the Wintergarten in Berlin announced enthusiastically that he was going to tell a political joke. The audience immediately began to applaud, and it was apparent that the real joke was the mere fact that the comedian had suggested the possibility of reciting an anti-Nazi jest. He corrected himself, of course, and said he wouldn't tell the joke, anyway, and then created mild humor by saying that you've got to be very careful about telling political stories these days. If the listener laughs, he said, it's all very good, but if he doesn't, you'd better hurry up and add that you heard the story just the other day from a devout Nazi.

As a matter of fact, some Nazis repeat much of the anti-Nazi humor with relish. Goering is said to be very fond of all the stories about himself. This report itself gave rise to the story that Goering was in a concentration camp. When you asked why, you were told that his chauffeur, who is supposed to receive one mark for every joke he tells his boss, had exhausted his supply, and that Goering, asking where such jokes originated, was told that they started in the camps.

With Goebbels It's Different.

Goebbels, however, is said to have no interest, vain or otherwise, in the jokes which touch him. And perhaps he has less reason. The jokes about Goering are largely kidding; they lampoon his uniforms and his vanity. But Goebbels, the most unpopular of the trinity of rulers that is most in the public eye, is hit in other spots.

One story, for instance, has Hitler going to heaven. At the gate, St. Peter asks him if he has ever lied. Hitler replies that he has never done so consciously but may have lied without knowing it on occasion. St. Peter asks how often this has happened and Hitler replies, "probably two times." He is then made to walk two kilometers as punishment before entering.

Then Goering arrives, is asked the same question, admits to some 50 unconscious lies, and is made to walk 50 kilometers as punishment. When he comes back puffing he asks St. Peter: "Say, hasn't a little fellow by the name of Goebbels been here?"

"Yes," St. Peter answers, "he's gone back to get his motorcycle."

Another story lampoons Goebbels' club-foot. Hitler, Goering and Goebbels are discussing what part they will take in the next war. Hitler says he will again become a private, as in the last war. Goering says he will again become an aviator. Goebbels maintains silence until the others press him; then he says: "Like Horst Wessel, I will march along in spirit." (Horst Wessel is the martyr author of the Nazi hymn, called the Horst Wessel song, which has a line about everybody marching along with the Nazis in spirit.)

The press propaganda is ridiculed in a story which again has Hitler arriving at the gates of heaven. When he says: "I am Adolf Hitler. I have regenerated the German people," St. Peter replies curtly: "I never heard of you."

St. Peter sends a messenger to earth, however, to make inquiries. The messenger returns and tells St. Peter no one named Adolf Hitler is known in Germany. Hitler storms and rages and asks the messenger where he went. The messenger says he went to cafes and restaurants and talked to people on the street.

"My God," Hitler interrupts, "You should just have read the newspapers."

Another joke on the same topic has two men standing in the industrial Rhineland district. The one is saying, "Isn't it grand the way the smokestacks are belching, the factories going full blast, the people all happy at work."

The second man says there may be something wrong with him, but he doesn't see anything like that going on.

"Oh," the first one replies, "you haven't read your morning paper."

Goering-Goebbels Rivalry.

The difference in the way they react to political jokes is one of the points in the undercover rivalry between Goering and Goebbels. Each has an opera house in Berlin under his control, although Goering's has a higher rating. Each has his own celebrations and meetings to appear at, Goering largely at military gatherings, Goebbels at more cultural affairs.

There was a brief celebration in Berlin commemorating the second anniversary of the return of compulsory military service to Germany while I was there and I stood in the crowd that watched Goering ride in an open car to the Aviation Ministry, where he spoke. Although there were repeated and at times fervent cheers, he never smiled once, nor did he wave or acknowledge the crowd's greeting in any way. Afterwards, when he reviewed a platoon of troops and saluted the crowd, it was again impossible to discern any expression in his face except a stern, grave look. Some time later I saw him again at a premiere in the Staatliches Schauspielhaus, or state theater. He had come late and nobody noticed him until the end of the play, when he stood in what used to be the royal box with his actress wife. But again there was no expression. He applauded without showing any emotion at all.

I saw him once again, at the first performance of a revival of Oscar Wilde's "The Importance of Being Earnest." Here the box was in the front of the theater, on the side. The start of the play had been delayed about 20 minutes until Goering arrived, but once there, he apparently enjoyed himself immensely. He laughed often and heartily, but he betrayed an extreme nervousness. I don't think he sat in one position for more than a half minute at a time. He was constantly shifting around, leaning over the rim of the box, resting his head on his hand, running his hand over his face.

Oscar Wilde, incidentally, has enjoyed a resounding revival in Germany. "Lady Windermere's Fan" was playing to packed houses in Munich; in Dresden they had just put on "An Ideal Husband;" there was the "Importance of Being Earnest" revival in Berlin, and a movie of "A Woman of No Importance" was still playing at the neighborhood houses. All except "Lady Windermere's Fan" are pretty creaky, although an American or Englishman may find a little amusement in the translations. The reason for all the Wilde seems to be, as one person explained it to me, that almost all of the contemporary German comedy writers were Jews and their plays can no longer be performed. So time is turned back two generations to give the Germans some fun.

The theater, incidentally, and in fact most of the arts in their performance, are not dead in Germany, as some critics say. Creative artistic work of any merit is dead; no new novels, new plays, new musical compositions, and few new paintings are on a level which would command attention anywhere outside Germany. Sculpture alone seems to have a feeble chance of keeping abreast of the excellent work which Germans did in this field in the last 30 years.

But in the performance of artistic works of which the Nazis do approve, of accepted classics, there is still a high standard. The arts cannot be said to be dead in a country which has a Furtwaengler to conduct Wagner and Beethoven, in a country which produces more Shakespeare than England or America, or which has a Kreutzberg to lift its native dances to a high art. You look in vain, of course, for contemporary problem plays: there is no German "Dead End" or "Winterset" or "Awake and Sing." There is no experimental music. And the movies, even if well done, are too often Viennese operas or imitations of American revue films.

What is really shocking about art in Germany today is the realization that the same government can sponsor a moving, almost-perfect performance of "Parsifal," and at the same time jail those people who fight for a personal, mystical religion of their own; the same government can produce Goethe's and Schiller's plays about freedom at night and club men in concentration camps the next morning because they struggled for freedom.

(This is the fourth and last article in a series on a winter spent in Germany.)

JOHN DE BREBEUF

Recording the Middle West's History in Glass

THE American Indian in stained glass—a novel and ingenious fusion of an art which ripened in medieval Europe with subject matter from the North American wilderness—confers unusual interest on windows now being placed in St. Francis Xavier's Church, Grand and Lindell boulevards, and represented in color photographs reproduced on this page.

These show the central feature, with details from the side panels, of a window illustrating the history of the early Jesuit missionaries in North America. The main section, surmounted by a portrayal of the martyrdom of St. John de Brebeuf in 1649, is an exquisitely stylized map of North America, marked by reindeer and wigwams, the igloo of the Far North, the herds of the Great Plains, the plow of the agricultural Southwest.

A large cross indicates the first Jesuit settlement, north of the Great Lakes, with rays emanating, as the missionaries extended their work, to all parts of the country. The symbol of the Society of Jesus is placed over the junctions of the Missouri and Ohio with the Mississippi, where it was carried, historically, by Joliet and Marquette.

The Fight Over the 'Hitchhike' Baby

The Strange Situation That Developed After Little Donna Jean Allen Had Been Given Away to Strangers.

By a Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine

BLAIR, Nebraska.

ON A sultry day last summer a sorry little group of wayfarers came to this prairie town. They were young Jerry Allen, his 17-year-old wife, her younger sister, 13, and the Allen's baby daughter, Donna Jean, seven weeks old. They were hitchhiking from Sterling, Illinois, their home, to Hastings, Nebraska, where Allen said a job was waiting for him.

The travelers were hot, tired, hungry and broke. The baby, moreover, was sick, undernourished and sadly in need of a bath.

Kindly people of Blair gave help to the needy family. Among them were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bottorff, an elderly couple. Bottorff, a former railroad man, had a WPA job, and his wife did various kinds of domestic work and ran a small greenhouse in the spring. They didn't have much in the way of material possessions, but they gave the Allens a dollar to buy milk for the baby, a meal and a place to spend the night.

Mrs. Bottorff cooed at the baby, cuddled it and almost wept. Donna Jean was a pretty child, but her body was woefully thin (she weighed only six pounds), her yellow hair was sweaty and disordered and her blue eyes were clouded with misery. Her clothing was filthy. Mrs. Bottorff suggested that the baby be bathed and freshly dressed, but the young mother, Mrs. Bottorff later related, said she didn't know how to do that—she never had done it. The older woman was told that the baby had spent four of its seven weeks in an incubator.

Mrs. Bottorff turned in and washed the child herself. The most difficult part of the proceeding was getting Donna Jean ready to be washed. For, says Mrs. Bottorff, the little girl's clothes were stuck to her frail body, and removing them, even as gently as she could, was painful.

The next morning Bottorff helped the Allens get a ride out of Blair, and as the couple who had befriended them watched the itinerant family resume its journey they shook their heads sadly and wondered what would become of Donna Jean. They didn't have to wonder long. Three days later the Allens were back in Blair and the infant had been turned over to the Bottorffs.

The transaction apparently was quite simple. Mrs. Bottorff says young Mrs. Allen brought the baby up to her door and said, "I've brought you back a present. I'm going to give you my baby." The offer surprised the Bottorffs, but they didn't hesitate long about accepting it. They had often thought in late years of adopting a child; he is now 57 and his wife 52, and they felt their life would be richer with a youngster in the house. A statement of the transfer of custody of Donna Jean was written and signed. The Allens, according to Mrs. Bottorff, parted with their daughter without tears.

Donna Jean was in a precarious condition when she became a member of the Bottorff household. But she received good care and soon began to "pick up." All the neighborhood followed with affectionate interest the progress of the "hitchhike baby." She became the center of the Bottorffs' existence.

Last August the foster parents received a letter from Allen in which he said he was coming back to Blair and get the baby. He said he had a steady job at home and his wife was worried about Donna Jean.

A couple of days later Allen appeared at the Bottorff home and demanded his child. Mrs. Bottorff—her husband was not at home—refused to let him in and locked the screen door. She reminded him of the agreement he had signed, and he said it was worthless. She declared she would not surrender the baby except in obedience to a court order. When Bottorff came home at noon he and Allen went to see the former's lawyer and got into so violent an argument that a deputy sheriff was called. Allen departed, saying he would get a lawyer himself.

Not knowing what to expect, Mrs. Bottorff took Donna Jean and went into hiding for a week. Her husband prepared to use every resource to defend his right to the child in court. For a time he kept a loaded gun handy in the house in case an attempt should be made to take the baby away from him by more primitive means than the law.

But the father failed to reappear. And when the matter of the adoption of Donna Jean came up in court June 5 for final action, no objection was presented and the child became legally Donna Jean Bottorff.

The little girl has flourished remarkably in the year she has been a resident of Blair. She has increased in weight to 23 pounds, she is healthy and bright and clean. Her adoptive parents are very proud of her. They entered her in a baby show the other day. "Not," explains Mrs. Bottorff, "that I expected her to win, but I thought it would be a good opportunity to check up on her health and general development." She didn't win, but she was awarded a special blue ribbon for unusual development.

The Bottorffs are already planning for her future. Neither of them went beyond grade school, but they say Donna Jean is going to have a college education, no matter what sacrifices they have to make to manage it.

A good many people in various parts of the country have written to the Bottorffs about their insistence on keeping the hitchhikers' baby despite the natural father's attempt to reclaim it. All but two of the letter writers, say the foster parents, approved their course.

How the Apaches of Arizona Have at Last Come Into Undisputed Possession of Their Grazing Lands.

By OREN ARNOLD

A Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine

PHOENIX, Arizona.

FOR nearly six hours the dust cloud was visible. First it was a spot on the horizon, but it approached with ever-increasing majesty. When it was a mile or two away, the rumbling and thundering could be heard. The volume swelled in awesome crescendo — muted bassos that became roaring, broken by higher and plaintive calls and occasionally by shrill "Yip-yip-yips." It was music, wild incomparable music of the rangeland, for a great herd was in motion.

All at once the cloud topped a long ridge and one huge steer burst out, silhouetted against the dusty horizon.

"BAW-W-W-W!" he challenged, surveying the new country.

Then he dropped down to a trot, and 10,000 others came pouring over like an uncontrolled flood. However, they were under control. Back of them and around them rode men with neckerchiefs over their noses. Calm men who knew exactly what they were doing.

They and the cattle made a magnificent picture, but not even the cowboys realized the significance of the drive that day. This recent pageant of American industry was in reality a retreat—for, strangely, the Apache Indians had just challeneged the palefaces again and defeated them.

It was not a battle of tomahawks and rifles, arrows and knives. No prisoners were taken, no lives were lost. For once the red man used the white man's own weapons—and won.

The Apache sat around a table and made promises and threats. He pointed to signed contracts. He went to court. He beat the palefaces at their own system—and by doing so he has raised the income of the families on his particular reservation from $40 to $750 per year.

That herd of cows was being driven—at Federal command—from the Apache Indian reservation lands around San Carlos, Arizona. Back of the drive was a fight as bitter if not as bloody as any the whites and reds ever had in pioneer days.

The Apache acres are rich, lush with grass. White cattle men discovered that as early as 1890 and—without permission—began to graze their animals there. Early in the nineties the Chiricahua Cattle Company decided that formal permits might be safer, and they got them.

In 1899 a half-breed Indian, son of a white trader, drove some of his own cows onto that grassy flat. He was entitled to do so because he was half Indian; but he was half white, too, and knew many paleface things. He knew the Chiricahua people had a sort of permit for 2000 cattle, but in their herds he counted 12,000.

He went to headquarters about it, and discovered—not very surprisingly—that the white cattle men were making no payment at all. Forthwith a "battle" was begun.

The "Three C" outfit (Chiricahua Cattle Company) didn't want to move, so they arranged the formality of a lease.

Soon the Double Circle was in with its cows. Then the Bar F Bar, the Cross S, the Bryce-Mattice, and others.

By the year 1920, approximately 1,080,000 acres of the Apache reservation were under lease by white ranchers, and for this only $80,000 was paid each year. To the Apaches, this was an approximate per capita income of $40; and in addition to that, the range was being destroyed.

Some of the Apaches earned a trifle more by getting jobs as cowboys. They were natural horsemen, and so rode the range for the white "permittees."

Around cow camps these red boys began talking. They pledged mutual co-operation. They couldn't drive the white man off, but—maybe they could compete with him!

And compete they did! The Indians went into cattle raising on their own. They did beseech Washington for recovery of some of the reservation lands, but Washington was indifferent, cold.

About that time, however, James B. Kitch was appointed superintendent of the reservation. Mr. Kitch had no patience for winking at laws and at human rights. He heard the Indians' complaints, looked into the records, and—to put it bluntly—told the white ranchers to take their steers and scram.

The white barons were astonished. They had some of the finest grazing land in America at a minimum price, policed and fenced by the Government. It was an ideal setup, from their standpoint.

Kitch meant what he said when he told the whites to go. The white men, well entrenched, also "went to Washington" as the Indians had done, but it didn't do any good.

WASHINGTON had no leg to stand on in the matter. Kitch pointed out the details of the situation, the undercover details, and with the possibility of recovery action in the courts looming, the Government ruled in favor of the Indians. Kitch first ordered the Ash Flat range vacated in 1924. He had a plan.

He told the Three C ranchers to get out, and they did. On their erstwhile lands, Kitch moved in 900 new cows.

He told the Cross S outfit to get out, and it moved. Kitch drove in more cows of his own selection.

Next he told the Bar-F-Bar to vacate, and it was done; then the Bryce-Mattice. Each time, new stock was sent in.

This new stock on the Indian lands was high-grade in every way and selected for breeding. Kitch and other sympathetic white agents have built up the quality and the quantity, placing a few breed animals at a time with Indian families and groups. Under such care and such good feed the cattle multiplied rapidly, and a definite "new deal" for the Apache people was on.

The most recent exodus of white cattle—the pageant of hooves and horns, bellowing and dust described above—was that staged by the proud Double Circle.

This drive to new range, just completed, made the Double Circle last of the big outfits to go. The reservation is still "cattle country," but the cows are red men's cows. Only two insignificant white holdings remain, under temporary special privilege.

In 1927 the new herds had reached considerable size, so the red folk staged a great roundup without so much as a suggestion from Kitch. This roundup proved to be a significant step in the tribal independence of the San Carlos Apaches. For the first time since they came under white Government "protection," they were on their own.

In 1936, a count of 530 Indian cattle men showed that they owned 2[illegible] head, valued at $900,000. That was in July, and by now the number will be much higher.

THE HAGUE.

HOLLAND, it would seem, is not only distressed with the new husband Princess Juliana recently took unto herself, but even more distressed by the new figure Her Royal Highness brought back from her honeymoon. There was a time when the Princess Royal could bring herself to say, as she pointed gaily to her thick ribbed cotton stockings: "Do not laugh at these fat legs. The House of Orange must stand or fall on them." Today the generous calves and shapeless ankles which were once a point of pride with the stodgy matter-of-fact burghers of the Netherlands, are slender and hosed in expensive Parisian silk.

The Princess' figure was a symbol to the united provincials. Somehow or other they managed to be consoled by the prospect of another dumpy conservative Victorian Queen to succeed Wilhelmina, the present ruler. And that dowdy anachronistic figure of a woman who sits knitting in the palace windows and turns up her haughty royal nose at the changing fashions of today, is more indignant than any of them. For it was she who brought up Juliana to wear cotton stockings, eat heartily, and not arrive till the second act if she simply must attend such racy entertainment as Richard Wagner's "Tannhauser."

Prince Bernard Leopold Friedrich . . . Zu Lippe-Biesterfeld has already indicated that he will put up a stiffer struggle against the Royal matriarch than did her own Prince Consort, the late Heinrich von Mecklenburg-Schwerin—and that resistance was of a stubbornness to shame the Dutch. All that was 30 years and more ago. But Holland still remembers Prince Heinrich's debts and his drinking parties and boar hunts. But Wilhelmina broke his spirit. And that is exactly what she now proposes to do for her daughter's Prince—perhaps also for her daughter.

But Prince Bernhard (or Benno, as he's familiarly called) has a will of his own. Just 26, and only a couple of years out of his university, he has already demonstrated a quality of obduracy and emancipation even beyond his predecessor's.

The world considered Benno a little pitiable from the start. Year after year the Princess Juliana was offered her selection of a round dozen eligible princes—kings being out of the question unless they would renounce their thrones for her. And the Princess Juliana, though she seemed to be a nice girl in her way, was not considered by anyone outside Holland to be an ideal sort of wife. For one thing there was her figure. For another—her mother.

Benno appeared on the scene, callow, spectacled and obviously very well brought up. Or so it seemed. As a matter of fact he began his career in Holland in the manner of an awkward new puppy trying to wag its way into the affections of a strange household—and generally upsetting a tea cup or absent-mindedly chewing up a priceless napkin before he left the room.

HOLLAND, it would seem, is not only distressed with the new husband Princess Juliana recently took unto herself, but even more distressed by the new figure Her Royal Highness brought back from her honeymoon. There was a time when the Princess Royal could bring herself to say, as she pointed gaily to her thick ribbed cotton stockings: "Do not laugh at these fat legs. Today the generous calves and shapeless ankles which were once a point of pride with the stodgy matter-of-fact burghers of the Netherlands, are slender and hosed in expensive Parisian silk.

The Princess' figure was a symbol to the united provincials. Somehow or other they managed to be consoled by the prospect of another dumpy conservative Victorian Queen to succeed Wilhelmina, the present ruler. And that dowdy anachronistic figure of a woman who sits knitting in the palace windows and turns up her haughty royal nose at the changing fashions of today, is more indignant than any of them. For it was she who brought up Juliana to wear cotton stockings, eat heartily, and not arrive till the second act if she simply must attend such racy entertainment as Richard Wagner's "Tannhauser."

Prince Bernard Leopold Friedrich . . . Zu Lippe-Biesterfeld has already indicated that he will put up a stiffer struggle against the Royal matriarch than did her own Prince Consort, the late Heinrich von Mecklenburg-Schwerin—and that resistance was of a stubbornness to shame the Dutch. All that was 30 years and more ago. But Holland still remembers Prince Heinrich's debts and his drinking parties and boar hunts. But Wilhelmina broke his spirit. And that is exactly what she now proposes to do for her daughter's Prince—perhaps also for her daughter.

But Prince Bernhard (or Benno, as he's familiarly called) has a will of his own. Just 26, and only a couple of years out of his university, he has already demonstrated a quality of obduracy and emancipation even beyond his predecessor's.

The world considered Benno a little pitiable from the start. Year after year the Princess Juliana was offered her selection of a round dozen eligible princes—kings being out of the question unless they would renounce their thrones for her. And the Princess Juliana, though she seemed to be a nice girl in her way, was not considered by anyone outside Holland to be an ideal sort of wife. For one thing there was her figure. For another—her mother.

Benno appeared on the scene, callow, spectacled and obviously very well brought up. Or so it seemed. As a matter of fact he began his career in Holland in the manner of an awkward new puppy trying to wag its way into the affections of a strange household and generally upsetting a teacup or absent-mindedly chewing up a priceless napkin before he left the room.

He came to Amsterdam in a smart fast new American roadster, unattended. He drove up to the royal palace very fast, jumped out and ran up the great formal staircase to the imposing doorway where he was awaited by his future wife and her royal mother. Instead of slackening his pace at this point, instead of bowing very low and taking three cautious steps forward to kiss Her Majesty's hand, he came up all in a rush, threw himself into the Queen's bulky arms and kissed her on the cheek. And from that point forward he has been more and more troublesome, less and less ingratiating.

It will be recalled that there were other troublesome incidents to the marriage besides those of the Prince's creating. The Constitution of the United Netherlands makes it mandatory that anyone who marries the prospective ruler must be naturalized. This was duly enacted. But the Prince, although in royal circles he is still considered the ruler of the (now extinct) province of Lippe, was a citizen of Nazi Germany. As such he had loyalties not easily discarded. Hitler, it will be remembered, had him up to Berlin for a long conversation not long before the wedding. And when Holland refused to recognize his Nazi nationality, refused to hang the swastika in the streets, to allow bands to play the "Horst Wessel" (Nazi Party anthem) or even the German national anthem of the Imperial days, the German Government retaliated by holding up the passports of Prince Bernhard's three lady cousins and not permitting them (until the last possible moment) to come to Holland as Juliana's bridesmaids.

But more serious difficulties followed the wedding. It became apparent almost immediately that the good Queen Wilhelmina proposed to supervise the honeymoon herself. Prince Bernhard and Princess Juliana had scarcely arrived at the Hotel Patria in Krynicka, South Poland, when they received an imperious invitation to meet the Queen in Igls — a Swiss resort whither she had retired to recuperate from the wedding. An invitation from Queen Wilhelmina is, of course, really a command and no subject (even the Princess Royal and her Consort) dare deny it.

Prince Bernhard did. According to all reports he was furious. And Juliana, though the habit of obedience is strong in her, was in no mood to give up the first freedom she had tasted in her life at the Queen's behest. After all she is 28 years old. So she sent the Queen a wire saying she was ill and unable to come immediately. Benno refused to answer at all.

Frightened at her own boldness, Juliana thereupon changed her mind and persuaded her husband to advance the date of their departure from Poland. He agreed. But on the way to Switzerland, the couple made a detour. They stopped off and had themselves a fling in Vienna, while Wilhelmina fumed. She was no happier when they finally did turn up at Igls. For Benno stormed and roared his indignation from the house tops. He was so outraged at the restrictions on his conduct which Queen Wilhelmina thereupon attempted to impose, that he went to perhaps inadvisable lengths to assert his independence. In the end he was so irrepressible that he offended even his bride's sense of propriety—which it may be imagined is fairly well developed, especially when she is directly under the influence of her beloved mother.

AT MITTELZEL on the Island of Reichenau, Lake Constance, he carried on so gaily that he was publicly rebuked by Juliana, who thereupon retired to her room for a week (the papers said she had a severe cold), wrapped herself in a tall huff and prepared to sit it out.

Inklings of these incidents trickled down the back stairs of the hotel, went whispering through the corridors, were picked up and escorted home by stiff Hollandaise matrons in Philharmonic hats. By the time they turned up in Amsterdam and The Hague, they had rolled themselves into rumors of imposing dimensions, as snowballs do. But scandalous as they seemed, they were as nothing to what followed.

Somehow or other Juliana's irritation waned and she came out of hiding. A few days later she and Prince Bernhard packed themselves into the swift Maybach-Zeppelin motor car (price $15,200) in which they had begun their zooming tour, and set off for Paris, leaving Queen Wilhelmina and her three ladies-in-waiting and her three gentlemen equerries with their hands in their pockets, so to speak. Paris was distinctly not on their itinerary, and it is very doubtful that they had the Queen's permission to take it in.

At the French capital they put up at the Crillon, one of Paris' proudest hotels, using the suite of rooms that had once been occupied by Princess Anastasia of Greece, by John D. Rockefeller Jr., and by the Duke of Windsor. For the first time in her life Princess Juliana began to discover the way people normally live outside palaces.

Of course Juliana had been to the University of Leyden and had traveled in Europe without her mother. But previously she had been scrupulously guarded by ladies in waiting, secret service agents and representatives of her autocratic mother. Every move she had made had been zealously considered and decided for her. There had been a pretense that she was living a life of her own. But everyone knew it was a sorry sham.

NOW for the first time she began to take an interest in her appearance. She had never been allowed to choose her own clothes. In Paris she did. And apparently the girl had taste, for her photographs show her looking very smart indeed.

Under Prince Bernhard's influence, she also began to lose weight. Late parties and an amusing life may have had something to do with it. But in addition she began to diet with a zeal no one knew she had in her. It is reliably reported that she lost 31 pounds between the time she left Switzerland and the time she showed up again at The Hague.

But if the reports that reached Holland from Switzerland caused consternation it was a private dismay compared to that which was observed during her stay in Paris. The most scandalous news to pious Hollanders was a report that the Prince and Princess had attended a party on a Sunday afternoon. That was beyond all endurance. The papers decided to take it upon themselves to show their disapproval of such ungodly frivolity.

"We cannot conceal our sadness," deplored the Rotterdammer, a no more than typically conservative sheet. "We cannot conceal our sadness about their desecration of the Sabbath. We must remind even princes and Royalty of the Law of the Lord. If the royal couple keep on traveling and visiting places of amusement on Sunday, they may lose the love of many true Orangists.

"Moreover they will break down a mighty tradition of the Dutch Royal family that has given, in this respect, an admirable example to its subjects."

Such forthrightness was surprising even in a zealous Calvinistic nation, for respect for the House of Orange verges on adulation and except in politics it is virtually immune to criticism.

The Queen had returned home by this time and was taking in everything. She and her two counsellors, Dr. Hendrik Colijn and Dr. I. A. J. Tripp (Premier and financier, respectively), doubtless held many long and worried conferences as to what course should be adopted to force the Prince into

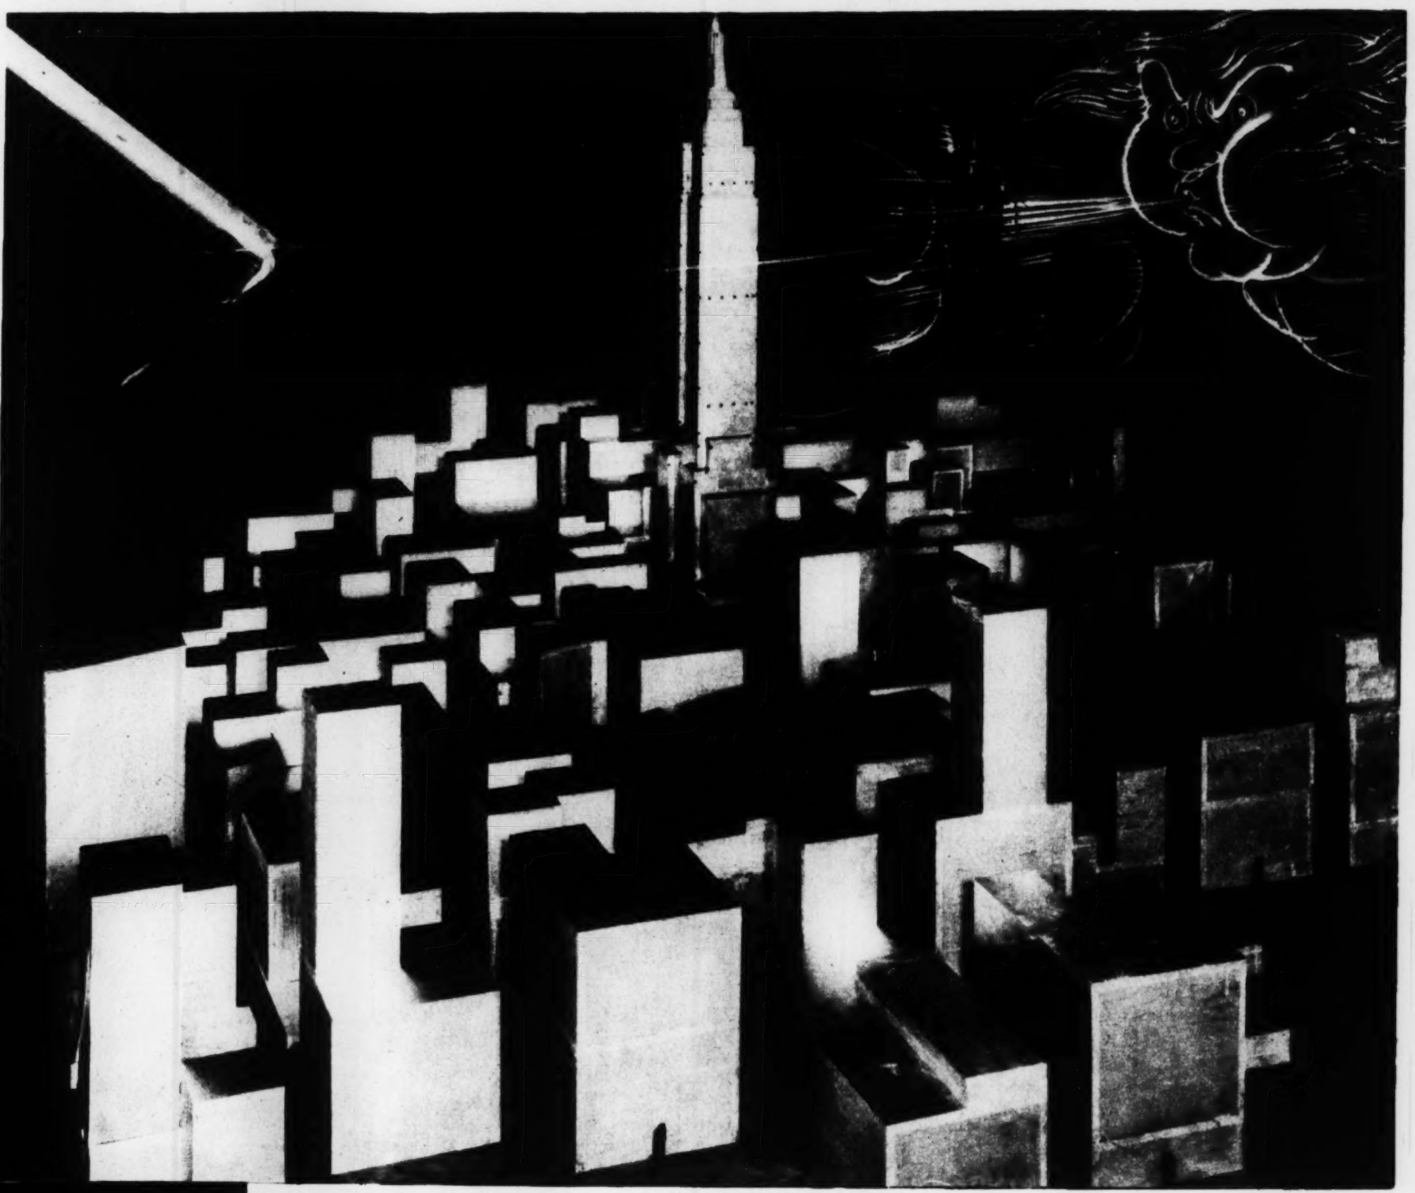
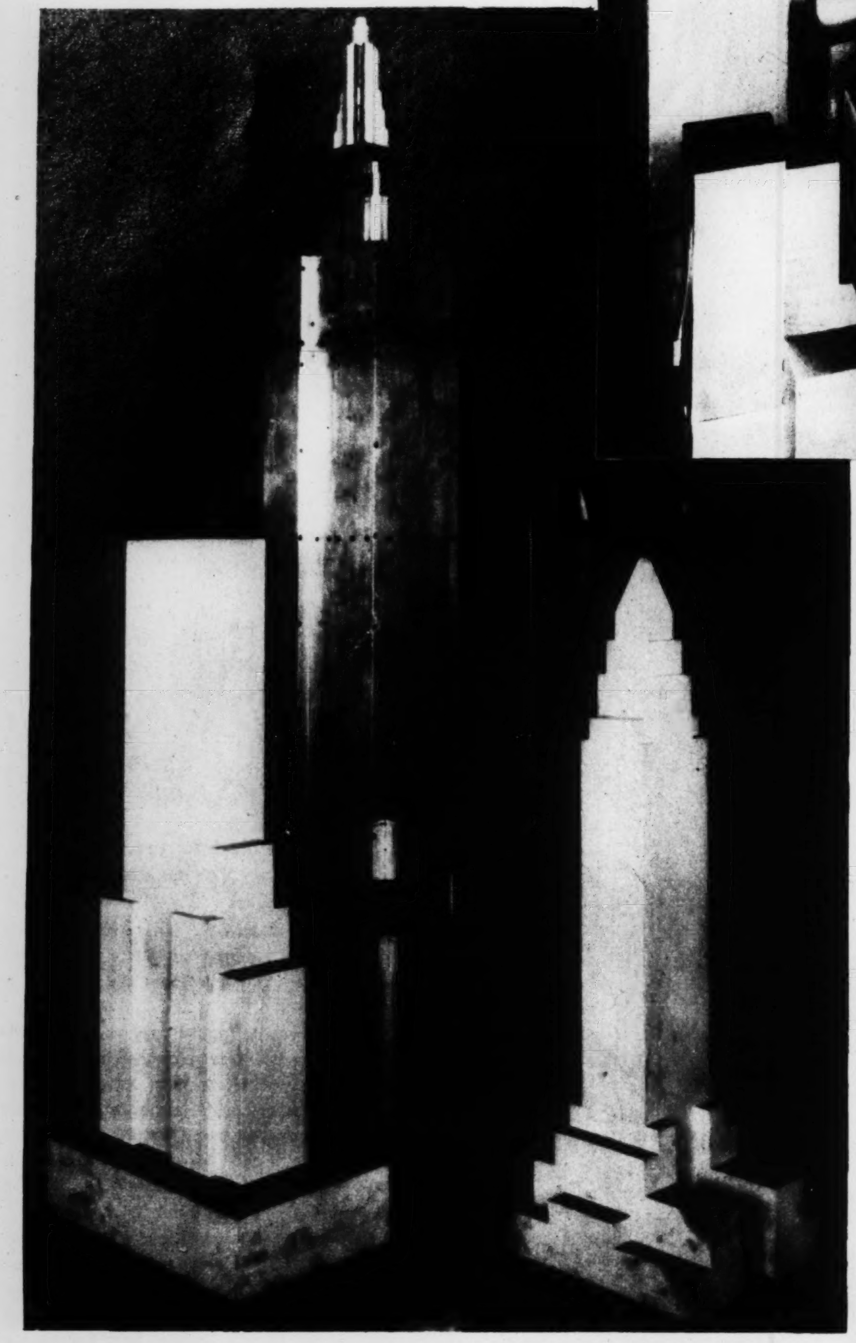
Why the Skyscraper Is Safe From Storms

Research, Conducted by the Government With Models, Leads to the Conclusion That Great Structures Need Not Fear the Elements as long as Proper Materials Are Used.



Model of a section of New York City used in the experiment.



The Empire State Building and two of its smaller neighbors, all modeled to scale. The Empire State is five feet high.

THE average skyscraper worker or dweller seems to take the safety of his surroundings for granted, in the same casual way he takes the radio or the telephone for granted. That is, until the elements rage in unchecked fury outside his window. If the wind shrieks at a high pitch and he thinks he feels the building sway slightly, or if the lightning seems to stab viciously close out of an ominous sky, sometimes his complacency is disturbed and he wonders a bit.

Scientists, too, have wondered, but they haven't left it a matter of conjecture. At the National Bureau of Standards in Washington, D. C., they have constructed a miniature section of New York City and a 10-foot wind tunnel in which they are able to simulate and measure with accuracy the behavior of tall structures, including the Empire State Building, during terrific storms.

From these measurements, Dr. H. L. Dryden, chief of the bureau's aerodynamic section, has reached comforting conclusions.

"It was clearly demonstrated," he said recently, "that even under the strongest winds this country knows there is virtually no danger of our huge skyscrapers toppling over. Their resiliency, underpinning and strength of materials indicate they will stand the gaff over long periods of time in the face of constant strain caused by storms and wind. However, bureau experts are now convinced that any further concession as to cheapness in actual building materials is likely to become dangerous."

One of the most important discoveries made by the Government investigators was that the skyscrapers around the Empire State Building, although much lower than the world's tallest building, shield it from gales that strike from the Atlantic Ocean or the Jersey flats, and it in turn shields its smaller neighbors.

Wind, Dr. Dryden found, increased the normal atmospheric pressure of 14.7 pounds per square inch in some places on buildings and decreased it in others, creating a suction. But the variance usually did not exceed a few tenths of a pound per square inch.

"The results on the model of the Empire State Building and some other buildings," he reported, "show that the pressure varies greatly from point to point and that suction effects predominate.

"The greatest loads on the building occur when the wind blows directly against one face. The average force is 35 to 40 pounds per square foot at wind speed of 100 miles an hour. At other wind speeds the pressure varies considerably. For instance, at 50 miles an hour the pressure is only nine to 10 pounds per square foot."

In the miniature section of a city, six square blocks are included, with 80 buildings done to scale around the Empire State model, which is five feet tall and is built of aluminium plates. The other models are made of wood blocks. Artificial winds are produced in the 10-foot tunnel by a blower. The Empire State model has instruments similar to those used on the building itself for measurement of wind pressure.

THAT the Empire State Building sways slightly, rarely more than two inches at most, has been determined by measurements on the building itself with a collimator. This is an instrument which essentially is a telescope. It is mounted on a tripod in the fire shaft at the sixth floor level. The observer may look through the collimator straight up the shaft and see an illuminated target on the eighty-fifth floor. The target is criss-crossed with hair lines at quarter-inch intervals, showing how far it moves to the right or left of a direct line from the telescope.

But although the sway does not seem great, it can be important. To an office worker seated 1000 feet in the air and trying to concentrate, a slight sway might become annoying and even cause unconscious fear to those of nervous disposition.

The effect of lightning on this country's skyscrapers is negligible, it was indicated by observations on the Empire State Building in recent months. In the midst of severe thunderstorms lightning bolts struck the metal mooring mast that tops the structure on three successive occasions. Each time the bolt grounded harmlessly in a flash of flame, causing someone to remark that the building was the "largest lightning rod in the world." Workers in other skyscrapers realized they were protected against lightning by their towering neighbor.

That New York's skyscrapers probably would be able to withstand bombardment from an enemy fleet was indicated by the manner in which the Telephone Building in Madrid stood up under six months' shelling. Although the tallest building in the city and chief target for Franco's artillery, only its upper floors were damaged, the structure as a whole is still sound, and workers have continued at their desks there throughout the siege, regarding it as a safer place than any small building.

MOST skyscrapers don't have a useful economic life of more than 30 years, according to a survey recently completed by the National Association of Building Owners and Managers. Few office buildings, it found, have reached a greater age than that, and many of them outlived their usefulness long before that time.

However, the Empire State Building probably will last much longer than three decades, the Government experts say. Believed to be a masterpiece of building strength, the building weighs 600,000 tons, distributed with precision, and is supported by 210 columns. Some 300 tons of durable chrome nickel steel were employed to make the panels in its 6400 windows.

Office buildings won't be made higher for years to come, Colonel W. A. Starrett, whose engineering company built the Empire State, declared in a recent statement.

"The skyscraper is on probation," he said. "Marking time, so to speak, until the public decides whether it wants to work up in the clouds or not.

"It is perfectly possible architecturally to go on building skyscrapers. They can go higher than 100 stories, given a broad enough base. But while big buildings are not likely to go any higher for the present, they are most assuredly going to be broader. They are going to spread out to take in entire city squares, perhaps two squares."

The MYSTERIOUS COLLEGE DUEL WAS a PUBLICITY RACKET

But the Hoax Wasn't Discovered Before It Sent Romantic Rumors Flying About Los Angeles.

LOS ANGELES, California.

ROBERT COUSINEAU and Harold Bauer, Los Angeles Junior College students, stripped to the waist and staged a fencing bout before a crowd of fellow students one noon recently on the lawn of the college campus, using regulation epees with the three pronged metal caps on the end. After a half hour of thrusts and parries, Bauer was pinked on the right arm, and the referee declared Cousineau the winner. Newspaper photographers who took pictures of the affair asserted the opponents did not wear masks.

Immediately rumors flew about the college and Los Angeles that Bauer had been painfully wounded in a duel or that, although Bauer's wound was not serious, it had nevertheless been a grim duel for blood with bare points. That it had been over second place on the fencing team; that it had been over a girl. Stories that became enlarged in the telling went in for descriptions of spurting blood, screaming coeds, and a clanging ambulance.

An investigation was begun by the Los Angeles Board of Education, but fizzled out when it was revealed the "duel" was merely a publicity "build-up" for the annual school dance, and Bauer suffered only a scratch an inch in length and less than a thirty-second of an inch in depth, and only one drop of blood reached the surface of the skin.

But the controversy still went on among fencing enthusiasts as to whether the bout was foolishly dangerous and whether the reaction as affecting the sport was unfavorable. Some fencing coaches, such as Yale's Robert Grasson and Harvard's Rene Peroy, branded it as "very foolish," or "silly, but not serious." But L. A. Junior College's fencing coach, jovial, 30-year-old John G. Tatum, law and French instructor, who had arranged the match with permission of the head of the college, laughed off suggestions of danger and declared the other coaches had been misinformed as to the circumstances.

For one thing, Tatum said, the principals wore masks, protecting their faces and throats. This is in contradiction to statements by the photographers and some spectators. Pictures taken by the news cameramen show the opponents in fencing position and not wearing masks, but with students behind them holding the masks. Whether the pictures were actual ones of the bout, or were posed without masks merely to make them more impressive, is a matter of difference between the photographers and Coach Tatum.

Furthermore, Tatum said, Bauer and Cousineau had been instructed to aim only at the arms to prevent any remote possibility of one of the combatants being run through because of the breaking of a blade.

The point d'arret or three-pronged metal cap taped on the end of each epee had its three sharp points protruding at the customary distances of one thirty-second of an inch, the coach asserted. That, he pointed out, made it impossible for the metal to penetrate more than one thirty-second of an inch; it could make no more than a pin prick, or a pin scratch, drawing a corresponding speck of blood.

If the men did not wear masks, they ran serious risk of being blinded by a misdirected thrust, or of being scarred on the face. Besides scratches on the body, they could have received nasty bruises, as the epee blade is almost as stiff as a broom handle.

In foil fencing, the only legitimate target is the body from the waist up to the neck, and the four-sided foil blade has a rubber button, much resiliency, and a small bell guard, that is, hand guard. But in epee, where a touch anywhere is fair, the three-sided blade has the barbed tip so that touches may be proved by the rip on the opponent's clothing, has a large hand guard, is much heavier and, as has been said, stiffer. Regulation costume for epee fencing, is, besides the mask, a canvas uniform with two thickness over the chest and abdomen to prevent the barbs penetrating the flesh. Sometimes the fencer is bruised or scratched, even with this protection. Once in a great while an epee breaks in the press of combat, and while there is danger to the opponent, almost invariably the fencer whose epee breaks can stop his lunge quickly enough to avoid an accident.

But dangerous or not, the junior college "duel" proved one thing. That is, that publicity pays. Cousineau and Fred Schwankovsky, No. 1 man on the fencing team, got a two weeks' contract at [illegible] a week each in vaudeville, with the possibility of an extended Pacific Coast tour to follow. Coach Tatum has been offered a contract to make film shorts on fencing, and may give up his classes at junior college to accept it.

SKETCH

NEW YORK.

THESE are busy days for Samuel Leibowitz — the greatest mouthpiece of our era. Having saved Mischa Ross, Broadway booking agent, from the electric chair for the murder of beautiful Tania Lubova, night club violinist, he is preparing to venture again into the tense precincts of Alabama to renew his crusade for the lives of the accused Negroes in the Scottsboro rape cases.

Ross was slated for the electric chair—he had admitted to police that he was in the rehearsal studio in which the violinist was battered to death with a claw hammer last April—but Leibowitz promised a defense that would have made a long and bitterly fought trial at $800 a day and the State agreed to accept a second degree guilty plea calling for a prison term.

To call any man the "greatest" in his field is a step the wisdom of which is doubtful, but Leibowitz rates the accolade. No other practicing attorney even remotely approaches his murder case record and even the great William Fallon would have to fall back into his shadow. Leibowitz has appeared for the defense in 120 murders with this result:

Two were convicted, but obtained reversals on appeal.

Three received prison terms when the betting was heavily for electrocution.

There were two disagreements.

One hundred and thirteen were acquitted.

SKETCHES FROM LIFE

High Lights on Unusual Personalities

(SAMUEL LEIBOWITZ
L. C. GARDNER)

NEW YORK.

THESE are busy days for Samuel Leibowitz — the greatest mouthpiece of our era. Having saved Mischa Ross, Broadway booking agent, from the electric chair for the murder of beautiful Tania Lubova, night club violinist, he is preparing to venture again into the tense precincts of Alabama to renew his crusade for the lives of the accused Negroes in the Scottsboro rape cases.

Ross was slated for the electric chair—he had admitted to police that he was in the rehearsal studio in which the violinist was battered to death with a claw hammer last April—but Leibowitz promised a defense that would have made a long and bitterly fought trial at $800 a day and the State agreed to accept a second degree guilty plea calling for a prison term.

To call any man the "greatest" in his field is a step the wisdom of which is doubtful, but Leibowitz rates the accolade. No other practicing attorney even remotely approaches his murder case record and even the great William Fallon would have to fall back into his shadow. Leibowitz has appeared for the defense in 120 murders with this result:

Two were convicted, but obtained reversals on appeal.

Three received prison terms when the betting was heavily for electrocution.

There were two disagreements.

One hundred and thirteen were acquitted.

Some of his cases were considered suicide bets by other attorneys yet somehow Leibowitz has always managed to pull through. His stage direction of a murder trial pales the ordinary motion picture, some of which, indeed, have been based on his exploits.

Out of the voluminous records pull the case of Vincent Coll, the suddenly canceled Mad Dog of the metropolitan underworld. Coll was a beer runner with a murder complex. Kill, kill, kill, was his credo and in two years as a beer runner he became one of the most feared hoodlums in town. As a known slayer he was the first suspect decided upon by police when gunmen sprayed a Harlem street with machine gun fire killing a 4-year-old boy.

No one apparently had seen the machine gunner who leaned out of the automobile on East 107th street. Yet police announced a mystery witness and at the trial they produced a man named George Brecht. How Leibowitz broke Brecht's story has become known as the case of the Eskimo Pies.

Brecht told a straightforward story and a damning one for Coll. Leibowitz, although he had nothing but contempt for Coll personally, took the case because he thought that this time at least the gang leader was innocent. Brecht readily identified Coll and it looked bad for the defense. Suddenly Leibowitz noticed that whenever Brecht made a long speech he seemed to slip words out of the side of his mouth.

The lawyer leaned down to his assistant.

"That witness," he said excitedly, "is a stir bird."

Stir bird means a former convict. Again Leibowitz got the witness tired by firing countless questions and again the answers issued from the side of his mouth. This convinced the lawyer that Brecht's entire story was a tissue of lies and he seized on one of several points to prove it. Brecht had said he was a salesman of Eskimo Pies—chocolate covered bars of ice cream.

"Describe an Eskimo Pie," asked Leibowitz.

The witness was taken by surprise. He had never dreamed—nor had his coaches—that this would be questioned and as he gave a halting description Leibowitz sent out for 14 of the pies. When Brecht had done Leibowitz gave a pie to each of the jurors and to the Judge. Brecht had forgotten the most important point in his description——the sunburst trade mark of the manufacturing company. After that Leibowitz caught him in lie after lie and the rest was easy.

Another example of the way Leibowitz operates was his defense of a man who had a long criminal record as a pickpocket.

"What is your business?" Leibowitz asked.

"Pickpocket," was the prompt reply.

"And if you are acquitted here what will you do?"

"Go back to picking pockets."

This disarming frankness told heavily for the defendant and he too was set free.

LEIBOWITZ is almost 44 and looks older. His face has the florid tint associated with forensics and his hair is gray and thinning. He was born in Jassy, Rumania, on August 14, 1893, and came to America when he was 4. His father was a push cart peddler and could have used his son's willing arms, but with the tenacity of his race he insisted that Sam finish school. In Jamaica High School Leibowitz decided he was going to be a lawyer and he entered Cornell where he obtained his degree in 1915.

There is a story he does not deny that he asked the dean of the Cornell law school what he thought of a young man's prospects in criminal law.

"Not that, Sam, not that," the dean replied. So Leibowitz tried civil law first and wound up his first three years at an average wage of $35 a week. This was not the kind of money to appeal to Leibowitz and he decided to branch out. His first case was almost typical of his entire career. Called upon to defend a man accused of robbing a bar and grill by means of a pass key Leibowitz boldly demanded that the jury go down to the scene and test the key.

He had little doubt himself that it would fit, but he was betting on his ability to read human nature. He was right. The prosecutor was too timid to take the chance and Leibowitz played this up in his summation. He won the case — and his second cash client.

This most unusual client was a pickpocket whose pride had been touched to the quick by the charge that his victim had felt his hand in his pocket. He gave Leibowitz a $100 bill assuring him that in all his 24 years as a pickpocket no one had ever felt him at work and this convinced him the victim was lying. When he left the jubilant attorney reached in his pocket for the money. It was gone. It may sound like a gag, but Leibowitz swears that a few minutes later the pickpocket returned and gave him back the $100 bill. "Here," he said, "this proves that fellow wasn't telling the truth, doesn't it?"

The word that a good lawyer is in town races along the underworld grapevine and Leibowitz soon was beseiged by prospective clients. He defended such tabloid characters as "The Bread Knife Murderess," "The Gigolo Murder Widow," "The Razor Slayer," "The Mother Honor Slayer," and "The Bob-Haired Bandit." Almost invariably he got his acquittal and as case followed case his courtroom manner smoothed. Leibowitz is fortunate in that he can laugh heartily, so much that he sometimes requires the aid of an assistant. And he can drop his voice to the most tragic accents.

He has a retentive memory and can remember almost anything he has read. Thus he studied ballistics for one trial and managed to confuse the police ballistics expert. He studied medicine for another case and various subjects as the problems presented themselves. His preparations for a trial are painstaking and complete.

Among the most illustrious of Leibowitz's gallery of clients was Al Capone, the Chicago hoodlum. Capone was visiting his mother here in 1925 and sauntered into the Adonis Club. Pegleg Lonergan, a local bad man, sneered that no Italian was any good and the worst of the lot was the visiting gunman from Chicago. The lights suddenly went out and when police got them on again Lonergan and two of his friends were dead and another man was wounded. Capone and a few of his aides were arrested.

Four times Leibowitz freed Capone on habeas corpus writs just before the police were about to question him with rubber hoses. Witnesses to the shooting developed convenient lapses of memory and Al went free. He always respected Leibowitz's opinions thereafter and called him to Chicago before the income tax trial that sent him to Alcatraz for 11 years. Leibowitz told him he thought the Government had a cast iron case.

Leibowitz missed out in the greatest crime of the century, the fatal abduction of the Lindbergh baby when one of his rivals, Edward J. Reilly, got the defense of Bruno Richard Hauptmann. But while Hauptmann was awaiting electrocution Leibowitz got a gratifying share of the publicity by his visits to the condemned man in the death house at Trenton. Although convinced of Hauptmann's guilt Leibowitz was unable to shake him under intensive cross-examination and attributes this now to the misguided efforts of Ellis Parker.

THE Hauptmann incident—he withdrew with a flourish—and Scottsboro trials have been the high points of Leibowitz's career thus far. Next month the Scottsboro cases will be called again and Leibowitz, despite the hair-trigger animosity against him in Alabama, will be on hand prepared not to yield an inch. Twice he has fought the cases up to the Supreme Court of the United States and "we will go up again, if necessary," he says.

But he is just as proud of his epic acquittal of Convict Max Becker accused of the murder of principal keeper Durnford in the Auburn prison riot of 1929. There was a staggering array of evidence against Becker. Several witnesses had told of seeing him with a gun and a prison guard was ready to testify he saw the fatal shots fired.

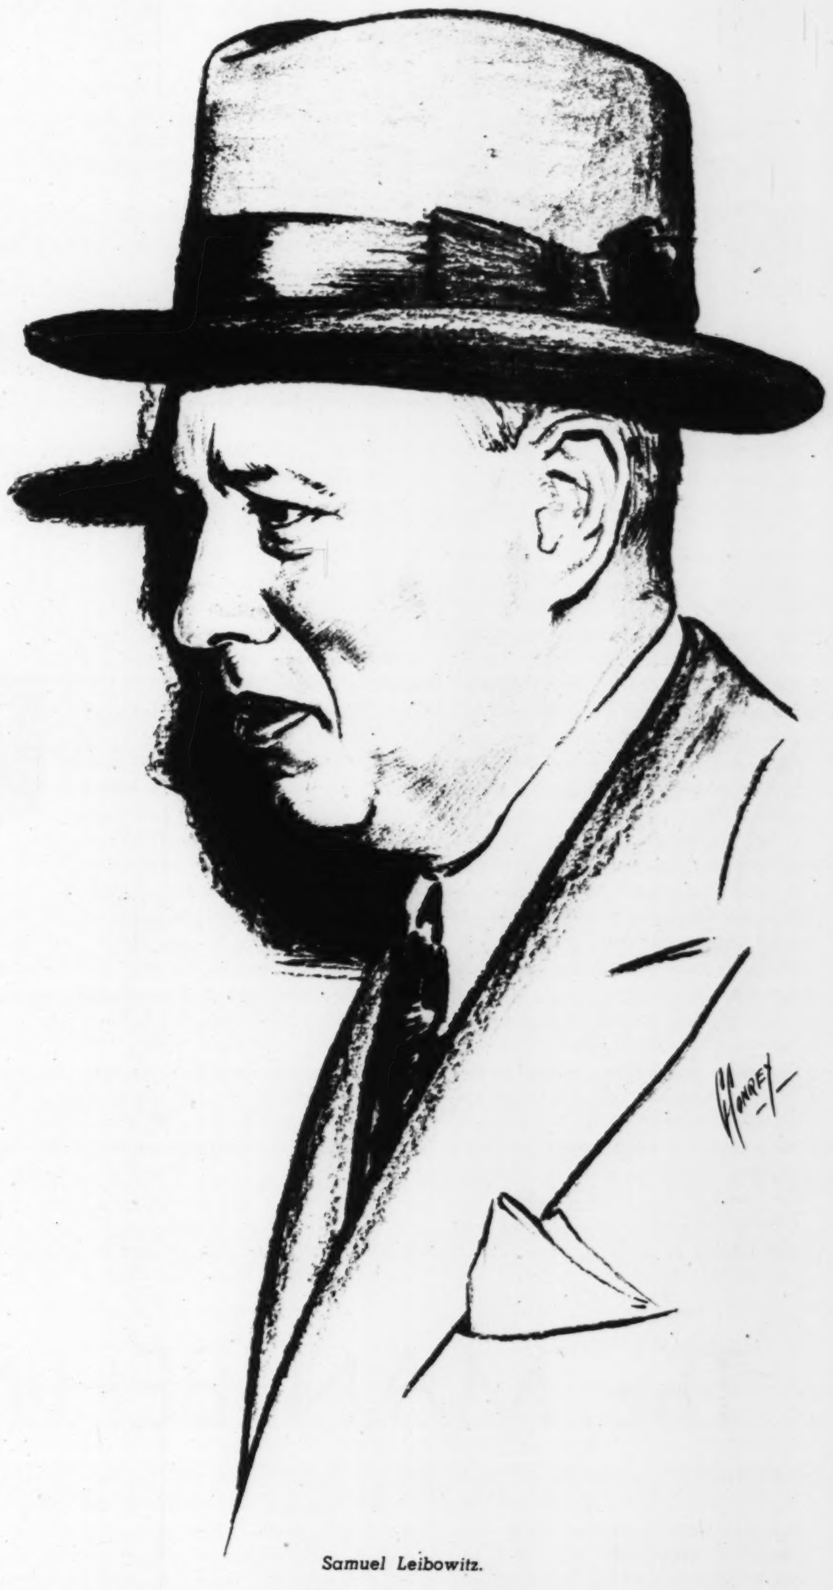
Leibowitz felt that his long string of victories was near an end as he questioned the guard who had seen the shooting. But during the questioning the confident guard slid casually down in his seat and crossed his leg over the rail. The lawyer immediately thought of an insult to the dignity of the Court, but before he could say anything the guard removed his feet. For hours Leibowitz kept him on the stand until again the guard slumped and his foot stretched out over the rail.

"Do you see these 12 citizens of fair Cayuga County in the jury box?" Leibowitz shouted.

"I do," replied the witness.

"Then what do you mean by sticking your feet up on that rail? Do you think you are in a dive? Do you think you are in a mining camp? Do you think you are in a speakeasy? Step down."

The guard left the stand sheepishly and Becker was acquitted, the jury indicating it would not convict anyone on the testimony of so unmannerly a witness.



Samuel Leibowitz.

There is also the case of Tony Romano charged with shooting a policeman. He said he had been working in a fish market in a Jewish district. The prosecution brought in a basket of different kinds of fish and asked Romano to identify them. He failed to name a single one correctly. But he was acquitted when Leibowitz pleaded with the jury to recognize "the fraud that has been perpetrated on my client. Was there in all that array of fish a single pike, or pickerel of any other fish that could be made into gefullte fish?" he asked.

"There was not," he said. "The prosecutor knows that this is a Jewish neighborhood and he does not show a single fish that makes gefullte fish. What a travesty on justice. "

Leibowitz does not believe in exercise or outdoor sports and has no hobby important enough to be listed as such. A quiet evening with his family is his idea of the ultimate in contentment and a fine family it is. His wife is a dark, pretty woman and there are twin sons 16 years old and a 10-year-old daughter.

The biggest disappointment of his life came two years ago when he threw his hat in the ring for the district attorneyship of Brooklyn. He based this campaign on the argument that he knew so much of the ways of the underworld he could circumvent virtually all crime. But he was opposed by a powerful political machine and went down to overwhelming defeat.

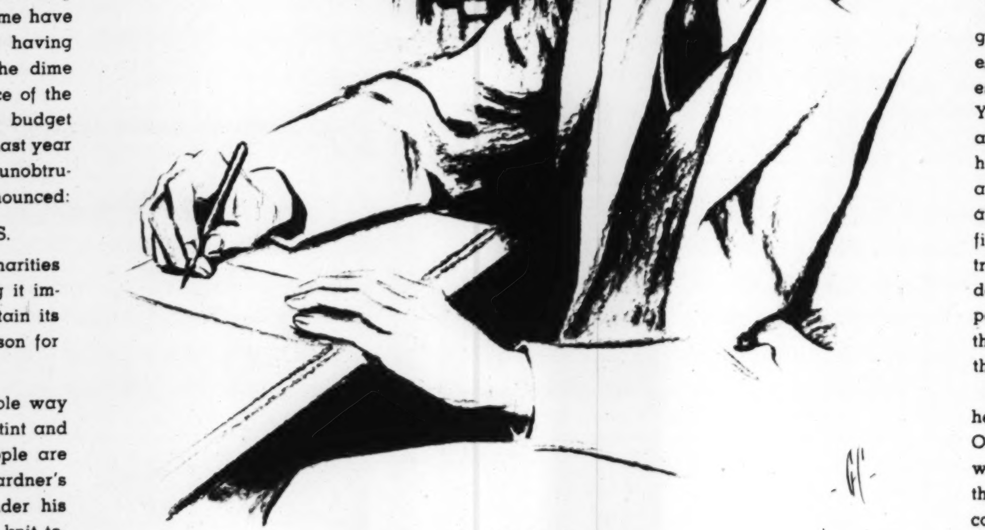
And this is true because Gardner himself is a small town man with a small town man's mistrust of publicity. At the urgent insistence of friends and members of his board of trustees. he has succeeded in overcoming his opposition to publicity, but never his involuntary dislike of the limelight. When informed the other day that there is talk of giving a large testimonial banquet in his honor—a tribute from citizens distinguished in their own right—he responded characteristically: "Well, I guess it would be a good thing for the House. "



L. C. Gardner.

L. C. Gardner's story is simple to the point of bareness, but those who know it at all intimately are in danger of becoming a little sentimental when they recall it. Being the son of a strict Pennsylvania Dutch mother and a New Englander who earned a precarious living as section hand, odd jobs man and factory worker, Gardner and his brothers and sisters (three in all) grew up without worldly ambition and never acquired any. "I used to carry my lunch to school and wore red top boots and studied McGuffey's Reader." The place was Newark, Ohio; the time, the turn of the century. In the nineties physical culture was discovered and thoughtful men began to rebel against the attitude toward play that had been current during the previous hundred years—an attitude which implied that recreation is fine, after you've finished your 14 hours' work.

Exercise and play became recognized as good and necessary in themselves and earnest men began to preach a doctrine of earnest amusement. Gardner was sent to the Y. M. C. A. as a boy and was so enthusiastic for it that he became a "leader." Then he decided to adopt "Y" work as a career and was sent to Springfield College, shortly after Luther Halsey Gulick's time. Springfield was then the only school in the country that taught recreation leadership. Today the subject is accepted as a valuable part of the curricula of most universities and the career of recreation supervisor has all the official sanctions.

As a trained "Y" worker L. C. Gardner held jobs in Flat River, Missouri; Belleville, Ohio, and Sewickley, Pennsylvania. That was his apprenticeship. He married and three daughters were born. Then he became director of recreation for the Carnegie Steel Company at Homestead, Pennsylvania, and with a staff of 20 men began to try his accumulated doctrines of pleasure on a community whose men folk forged steel for 12 hours a day and came home and threw a shoe at the children if they squalled. How Carnegie Steel Company happened to institute such a program is still a mystery, but the year was 1917 and times were good—for munitions makers and their kind. The workers must be kept contented.

"At the time it seemed all very matter-of-fact," Gardner says now. "But today I can see that we were really pioneering. The principles of recreation leadership we used at Homestead are still in advance of what we have in St. Louis."

EVERY school and playground, public or parochial, came under Gardner's supervision. The town's every athletic event, church social, lodge party and picnic came to depend on him for management. And steel workers played baseball and basketball. The "Mill" considered his work so important that he was granted industrial exemption from the draft, when the United States entered the war.

But after 12 years a new general manager, Ralph H. Watson, came to Homestead. Watson became a good friend of Gardner's, but they differed in kind. Watson was a rugged individualist and felt that recreation should be the duty of the community—not the Mill. He offered Gardner a job as a steel company executive and Gardner of course turned it down; he couldn't think of throwing away 20 years of experience for a new career in an alien field. And Watson refused to recognize that the Mill is the community in Homestead. It pays the taxes, picks the government and decides how the community shall live. Watson refused to use the Mill's political influence to have the town take over Gardner's recreation program, and they went their separate ways. Watson is now vice-president in charge of production at the United States Steel Corporation.

A colleague from Pennsylvania got Gardner his present St. Louis position when the grapefruit ranch failed in 1930, a year after his quitting Homestead. The miracle of rejuvenation he accomplished at the old settlement house is not a mystery.

Wesley House is the old Niedringhaus mansion on Bell avenue at Cardinal, an ornate decrepit relic. Founded by George Warren Brown as a missionary endeavor of the now defunct Methodist Deaconess Association, its leadership was accepted by Gardner on condition that its activities henceforth be strictly nonsectarian. From year to year the neighborhood changed. Catholics, Protestants, Jews of various nationalities dominated the neighborhood and the membership. In recent years it has become almost wholly Negro.

In each population change Gardner was able to adapt the program to the community's need. He adopted a principle of "group work" which has come to be recognized as one of the most significant trends in the field. Every member of the House has been primarily a member of a small club, and these clubs — drawn from boy gangs, sewing circles, little girls' dancing classes and so on—came to represent a small population governed by a House Council composed of representatives of each group.

Although the primary function of the House is supervised play, this is not intended to be the final objective. Groups that play together come to demand other activities. Discussion groups are formed within clubs and turn into classes. Singing turns into the production of light opera. Music lessons are provided. Other agencies in the city become the sponsors of activities in which they specialize and the House is open to every sort of outside agency or union, provided it is "constructive and not profit-making."

As the Negro population grew and the white population moved elsewhere, the House established playgrounds and meeting places outside the immediate neighborhood. School principals applied to Gardner for trained recreation leaders. And it became apparent to him that the school is the log-

SCIENCE'S PLAN to SUBSTITUTE DIET for the DENTIST'S DRILL

CHICAGO, Illinois.

THOSE four persons out of every five who dread a visit to the dentist, whose nerves are torn to shreds by the grinding of his drill in their most sensitive cavities may hope for gentler treatment from him in the not too remote future. They may look forward to diets, not drills; to prevention, not fillings; to having healthy, happy teeth, unsmirched by the dark inroads of decay.

For, during the past four years, a group of Northwestern University research workers making one of the most comprehensive studies of dental decay ever undertaken, has found that diet has a definite relation to tooth decay. And scientists, according to Dr. A. D. Black, dean of the university's dental school, are far on the way to being able to give specific diets to prevent such decay. So that in several years from now one's dentist may find him susceptible to tooth decay and give him a diet list to follow which is as exact as that for a diabetic. This might offer poor consolation to gustatory enthusiasts who want to remain free and unbridled at the table, but they probably will have to make their sacrifices to science.

One of the most important phases of the research at Northwestern University has been a chemical method which was found for studying a person's susceptibility to tooth decay by a test of his saliva. While earlier research workers, among them Dr. G. V. Black, the present Dr. Black's father, had demonstrated that the decay of teeth was caused by some abnormal condition of the saliva, it was found that the saliva was a very difficult fluid to study, and all efforts to find by analysis the variations which cause decay had failed. The plan which the group of Northwestern University uses was suggested by L. S. Fosdick, professor of chemistry, and includes chemical analysis of the saliva.

First a sample of the patient's saliva is taken, and a certain amount of powdered tooth enamel is added to it. This is sealed in an especially designed glass tube which is shaken in a water bath at body temperature for four hours. This gives the same effect as the action of saliva on teeth in the mouth of the patient, but because the tooth enamel is powdered the action is much quicker; it shows in four hours what it might take six months of clinical observation to demonstrate.

AFTER four hours the contents of the test tube are examined to determine how much of the powdered enamel has been dissolved. If the person is immune, none will be dissolved; if he is very susceptible much of the enamel will be dissolved.

Thus, Dr. Black points out, it is now possible to experiment with the saliva of persons at various times and after various diet changes and health measures, and determine what effect they have on the decay of the teeth. Heretofore it was only possible to study by clinical observation of the patient.

"With the new process the diet can be changed every two or three weeks until the saliva test shows the teeth immune to decay," Dr. Black says. "Formerly diet changes could be made only every six months or so. The diet must be fitted to the individual. What will be successful in one case may not work in another."

For the past four years the research group at Northwestern has been meeting every Thursday. It has this far studied 750 cases. Its members began by examining a dozen or more patients each week. Clinical instructors first made a thorough examination of each mouth, and estimated the degree of susceptibility to decay. Bacteriological cultures were made from the teeth, and samples of saliva collected and patients were urged to return. The group also experimented with 30 students, testing their saliva every three weeks to determine what effect addition of certain vitamins to their diets had. Seventy-five children in a Chicago orphanage have also been the subjects of an intensive study for the past year, and their saliva has been tested every three months.

Dr. Edward H. Hatton, left, and Professor L. S. Fosdick before the machine used to determine the effect of saliva on tooth decay.

"In due time," says Dr. Black—and he will not commit himself to anything more definite than "in due time"—this research group should "be in a position to make specific suggestions relative to diet which may serve as a guide for the dental practitioner."

But in the meantime, if you wish to keep those molars intact, here are some suggestions Dr. Black says will be helpful:

1. Natural simple foods should be eaten in preference to highly refined processed foods. All children prefer the most simple foods anyway.

2. There should be a generous supply of those vitamins which are contained in fresh fruits and vegetables.

3. In off seasons, as during the winter months, vitamins A and D tablets may be used to replace a part of the fruits and vegetables.

4. Proteins should be supplied by milk and milk products, also from glandular meats.

5. Carbohydrates (sugar and starches) should be reduced to the necessary minimum.

6. Generally minerals—as calcium and phosphorous in tablet form—should not be administered. In exceptional cases, they should be given on professional advice.

In the experiment with the 75 children at a Chicago orphanage a dietitian made a record of what each of the 75 children ate over a period of six months. She found that the children were getting too much carbohydrates (sugar and starches again) and not enough fresh vegetables and fruits. Tests of the saliva of these children made every three months over a period of a year showed that the longer they were in the institution, the more susceptible were they to tooth decay. This further bore out the theory that fresh fruits and vegetables and a minimum of starches and sugars are necessary for dental health. In the last three months the diet of the children at this institution has been changed, and the carbohydrates cut down and fresh fruits and vegetables increased.

The cookies have been replaced by fresh fruits; canned starchy vegetables given way to fresh green vegetables. The food bill has increased, but Dr. Black is confident that the children's teeth will be found to be in better condition. The result of the three months' test will not be available for several weeks.

In the case of the 30 students there is also an indication that the addition of vitamins A and D to their diets (those found in fresh fruits and vegetables) decreased their susceptibility to dental decay.

The reason that the carbohydrates should be reduced to the minimum necessary for health is that they are the only foodstuffs that through the action of micro organisms in the mouth can be reduced to lactic acid. And lactic acid in the saliva has been found to be the cause of tooth decay.

Here, however, Dr. Black points out, that "the acidity of the saliva in the patient's mouth has nothing to do with decay of the teeth. It relates more particularly to the nature of the acid that is formed in the test tube during the four-hour test as a result of the peculiar composition of the particular saliva.

"Special emphasis should be placed on the statement that the saliva of each person is alkaline after each meal and gradually becomes acid before the next meal, and any effort to change this condition either to make the saliva more alkaline or more acid, would be in no way related to this experiment and would have no effect on decay of the teeth."

Lactic acid is formed only in the protected places—next to the gums, in the defective pits of teeth where the enamel lobes fail to unite perfectly, and between the teeth—and not in the saliva.

"Acid mouth" is thus exploded by Dr. Black as a cause of dental decay. He also explodes the theory that mouth washes have any antiseptic value as far as dental decay is concerned, inasmuch as the antiseptic value of no mouth wash has been found to last longer than 20 minutes. He regards the tooth brush and diet as the best preventives of decay.

THE common idea that teeth decay because they are hard or soft is also wrong, according to Dr. Black. Past research has shown that there is no appreciable difference in the structure of the enamel of the teeth of different persons, except in cases where different lobes of enamel fail to join properly. The thickness of the enamel is of no real consequence in the matter of decay. Thus in the experiment with the saliva the powdered enamel is made from an extracted tooth, not from the patient's teeth.

The research group at the Northwestern University's Dental School consists in addition to Dr. Black, of a physiologist, Professor Earl Zaus; two chemists, Professor L. S. Fosdick and Professor H. L. Hanson; a pathologist, Dr. Edward H. Hatton; a bacteriologist, Miss Margaret Eppel; a nutritionist, Dr. Clara Davis; and three clinical teachers, Dr. R. E. Backwell, Dr. Eugene Bobmer, and Dr. Z. M. Shafer.

Dr. Black made the announcement of the progress of the research in prevention of dental decay at the golden anniversary homecoming of the alumni of the dental school recently. The saliva test is regarded as an important step forward in the study of dental decay.

The MAN BEHIND WESLEY HOUSE

ical neighborhood meeting place. After years' of experience with these so-called outposts, Gardner finally applied to the school board for permission to use school buildings as neighborhood recreation centers, and experiments in this are now being conducted at two schools—which are kept open at night for the purpose.

"Recreation isn't an end," Gardner says. "For years, especially after the Homestead experience, I saw that this is a great field to help communities understand themselves and their problems.

"Communities may achieve democracy by regaining a sense of the local interest. Health, police, fire zoning, beautification—all could center around the school. If you could get solidarity in the neighborhood, revive the old town meeting, you might give the people some voice in their own affairs. Nowadays the average citizen doesn't feel as if he counts.

"Of course that goes back to our clubs. These small groups of youngsters are an educational first step in that kind of thinking. School patrons associations might become the voice of the community that centers around the school. Of course the school board is afraid of the political angle. That means that somebody doesn't trust the democratic principle.

"I maintain that they should be interested in the political angle. I'm hoping that recreation will be the entering wedge. If we have to work through school patrons and they want to limit themselves to non-political action, why then we'll have to find another group that expresses the interests of the neighborhood.

"If that Vashon School district had been organized and its objections had come from within, it could have enlisted the aid of similar groups in other school districts and they would have had strength. If a reaction comes from within it has conviction and facts. It is sure of itself. And you have a body of public opinion that simply can't be jolted.

"As I've grown older (Gardner is now 51) I've come to the conclusion that the greatest need of the country is to regain the democracy it has lost. Now I maintain that the individual can find himself and display his weight only in the small group.

"I for one am not afraid of the democratic principle. You can sway people in big groups and make them do silly things. But small groups will not be swayed and the right thing eventually comes out of them."

He looks back at the days he spent in Homestead and remembers the Homestead massacre—which was before his time. He recalls the first efforts of the employes there to organize and the adamant attitude adopted by the company. He recalls the formation of a company union there—as an expedient for permitting group insurance and binding the loyalties of the workers to the company by ties of money interest. And he tells of his excitement and amazement when he heard recently that the steel trust had tentatively recognized the C I O.

"There's a pattern to these things, don't you think?" he says in his slow halting way. They come slowly, but over a period of years I see the waking of group consciousness in the people. I trust the intelligence of the plain man; if he is allowed self-expression again he will use it for the best interests of the community." And Gardner proposes that the plain man shall become interested in his community by being interested in the welfare and recreation of his children.

MEANWHILE Wesley House is far from idle. The House itself was closed as a recreation and neighborhod center last month. For years Gardner had been hoping to turn the center into a settlement for the Negro population of the neighborhood. For years he had watched the brown faces of the children of the adjacent blocks pressed wistfully against the fence, and seen the members of clubs coming from distances of 10, 15 and more blocks away. But prejudice is strong and he recognized that in St. Louis white children and Negro children are infected with it. The outposts must be developed for the present membership of more than 2000. Then the House could be turned over to its rightful possessors.

So he worked over budgets and columns of figures week after week, trying to see how it could be done. He watched his staff, still working for less than manual labor gets, desperately trying to supervise the program which grew and grew despite all efforts to curtail expenses. He used W P A and N Y A workers to handle as much of the growing demand as possible and knit the 30 or 40 volunteers who came every week to lead clubs into a tight little faculty. And in the end the Budget Committee of the United Charities, after delaying the decision for six months and more, finally announced that there was no more money.

L. C. Gardner wearily crumpled little chits of paper scribbled over with penciled figures, called a special meeting of his board and recommended that the House be closed—henceforth to be used only as an office for the staff. According to his arithmetic there was only $75 left to pay for light and heat and repairs and janitor service for the remainder of 1937. And it would cost a minimum of $3000 to open it to the Negro neighborhood, while carrying on work at the outposts. After five years it was absolutely essential to raise the salaries of the staff.

Meanwhile the House was open to a few Negro organizations and within three weeks Gardner was amazed to find a flourishing school and supervised playground inhabiting the House—a little neighborhood house with a trained staff of 10 and an enrollment of 200 had come into existence almost without his realizing it. And how it is going to continue till the end of the year neither he nor anyone else has any notion.

This occurrence might, however, have been expected. Gardner has come to be recognized as the outstanding innovator in his field. Experts from all parts of the country visit him and try to analyze his methods. In St. Louis this quiet, incredibly patient and painstaking student of recreation has become known as the outstanding experimenter and administrator in his kind of work and even the members of his staff are frequently in demand for lecture courses and training schools in the technique of recreation leadership. So it was only natural that when the House ceased to be able to carry the financial burden imposed by its rising membership and the rising demand on its services, other organizations — the school board, the Urban League, the National Youth Administration, the W P A and a dozen others, should have come forward and offered facilities and equipment to carry on the program.

Honeymoon Troubles for a Streamlined Princess Juliana

line and, if necessary, discipline the Princess. Already they had had to deal with delegations of perturbed and stolid citizens, voicing pained regret and apprehension at what they had heard. Committees had waited on her to ask her to command the Prince to give up flying, to request that the Prince avoid publicity. . . .

But when the papers printed a story to the effect that the Prince, in a belligerent mood, had challenged a whole army of photographers and reporters to mortal combat for following him and the Princess into a Montmartre night club at 3 o'clock in the morning, the Queen must have gritted her teeth and prepared for combat herself.

The return to Holland of Prince Bernhard and Princess Juliana was attended by an untoward incident that served to upset everybody concerned. Instead of taking up his new duties with beseeming seriousness and the humility expected of him by this time, the Prince chose the occasion of his first meeting with the Cabinet (and that includes Dr. Colijn) to perpetrate a practical joke. He handed each of the grave legislators a cigar. And as they sat down to discuss matters pertaining to the conduct of the Prince and the safety of the monarchy and the nation, the cigars—one after another—exploded with terrifying reports.

That was too much. The Dutch are by no means a humorous people and this particular brand of German humor didn't (they say in Amsterdam) win a smile throughout the length and breadth of all Holland. People were simply shocked.

What the Queen said to him later will never be known. What she did was to make a public announcement that the Prince is to be put in the care of a guardian—an "official friend," probably an elderly general of impeccable background, stern Calvinistic principles and rigid manners. It is understood that the Prince has also been assured with fitting grimness that the Legislature is considering a reduction of the Prince's $135,000 annuity.

MEANWHILE all Holland is wondering what all this will lead to. A columnist in one of the less severe newspapers has already wondered openly how long the "official friend" will be able to stand up under his ward's way of living.

Only one ray of hope offsets the gloom into which the royal couple's escapade have thrown all loyal Holland. It is reported that the Princess is expecting the birth of a child. In case this turns out to be the case, it is generally believed that it will have a generally sobering effect on Prince Bernhard. The birth of an heir—especially a male heir—would certainly re-establish His Royal Highness' popularity with the people. For Juliana is the only person in the country eligible to become ruler in the event of Queen Wilhelmina's death. Prince Bernhard is not. His one function as Consort is the begetting of heirs for the House of Orange.

"Special emphasis should be placed on the statement that the saliva of each person is alkaline after each meal and gradually becomes acid before the next meal, and any effort to change this condition either to make the saliva more alkaline or more acid, would be in no way related to this experiment and would have no effect on decay of the teeth."

Lactic acid is formed only in the protected places—next to the gums, in the defective pits of teeth where the enamel lobes fail to unite perfectly, and between the teeth—and not in the saliva.

"Acid mouth" is thus exploded by Dr. Black as a cause of dental decay. He also explodes the theory that mouth washes have any antiseptic value as far as dental decay is concerned, inasmuch as the antiseptic value of no mouth wash has been found to last longer than 20 minutes. He regards the tooth brush and diet as the best preventives of decay.

THE common idea that teeth decay because they are hard or soft is also wrong, according to Dr. Black. Past research has shown that there is no appreciable difference in the structure of the enamel of the teeth of different persons, except in cases where different lobes of enamel fail to join properly. The thickness of the enamel is of no real consequence in the matter of decay. Thus in the experiment with the saliva the powdered enamel is made from an extracted tooth, not from the patient's teeth.

The research group at the Northwestern University's Dental School consists in addition to Dr. Black, of a physiologist, Professor Earl Zaus; two chemists, Professor L. S. Fosdick and Professor H. L. Hanson; a pathologist, Dr. Edward H. Hatton; a bacteriologist, Miss Margaret Eppel; a nutritionist, Dr. Clara Davis; and three clinical teachers, Dr. R. E. Backwell, Dr. Eugene Bobmer, and Dr. Z. M. Shafer.

Dr. Black made the announcement of the progress of the research in prevention of dental decay at the golden anniversary homecoming of the alumni of the dental school recently. The saliva test is regarded as an important step forward in the study of dental decay.

The SILENT WITNESS

The Ninth in a Series of True Life Detective Stories.

"Martha Westwood's daughter was aroused by three shots at close intervals."

By G. R. ALEXANDER.

FOR more than a year, students of crime have been arguing over the strange attitude assumed by Buddy, a little black-and-white Boston bull terrier, on July 10, 1935. The dog was the pet of Martha Westwood, who was murdered in the early morning hours of that day. The point of contention is whether, in view of the dog's actions, an innocent man has been jailed for life or whether the same man should have been executed, not only for Martha Westwood's death, but for three others as well.

At 1:42 a. m., Martha Westwood's 20-year-old daughter, Bertha, was roused out of a sound sleep by three shots, fired at close intervals, in the Westwood home at McKee's Rocks, a suburb of Pittsburgh.

The girl ran to her parents' bedroom. There she found the window pane broken and her mother dead. She had been shot while sleeping.

As her father, Justice of the Peace James J. Westwood, had not yet returned home from night court hearings, Bertha called police headquarters. Detective Sam Riddle responded. Through a quick examination of the victim and the scene, he soon reconstructed an elementary picture of the tragedy.

The angle of the wounds and the fact that most of the glass in the broken window pane had fallen inside the room told him the shots had been fired through a window opening into the second floor back porch. The fact that there was only one way to reach this porch and that through a narrow passage known as Clay Alley indicated the killer had come that way.

The testimony of a neighbor, Mrs. Sophie Sehar, who had heard the shots and had seen a dark figure bolt past the windows of her alley flat immediately after, indicated that the killer was "a tall, thin man, with long black hair."

And the fact that Bertha could not remember hearing Buddy, the pet Boston bull, bark meant to Riddle that the "tall, thin man" was no stranger to the Westwood household.

While Riddle was still engaged in putting two and two together, Squire Westwood, accompanied by Constable Timothy Drexler, County Detective Walter Monaghan and the latter's son, Earl, walked into McKee's Rocks police station. The squire had not heard the news. When told it, he almost collapsed.

HE SAID that at 7 o'clock he had driven his wife and their two younger children, Martha, 11, and James Jr., 7, to the movies. From there, he had gone to his office, adjacent to the police station, to hold some hearings. Shortly after 10, Constable Drexler had driven him to Carnegie. Drexler had taken along a friend, Mrs. Catherine Cole.

Purchasing some mineral water there, they had started back from Carnegie about 11:20 p. m., but had stopped on the way to pick up Miss Peggie Moran, a friend of Mrs. Cole's, whom they sighted on the street. At Drexler's nivitation, the four had then gone to Eddie Peyton's roadhouse, six miles out of McKee's Rocks on the Steubenville pike.

They stayed there until 2, Westwood said, when they drove to Brookline, five miles from the roadhouse, to get Monaghan and his son, who were joining them on a fishing trip. They left Monaghan's at 2:25 a. m. And it was there, from the lips of Sergeant Matovick, Westwood said, that he heard of his wife's murder for the first time.

It was a tough case; made more so, Riddle thought, by the fact that Martha Westwood's death was not the first from gunshot wounds in the squire's household. On February 2, three years previously, Westwood's 14-year-old daughter, Clara, had been found dead in her room. An official report blamed her curiosity about her father's guns. Six months later, August 23 to be exact, Westwood's 63-year-old father-in-law and his 57-year-old wife, John and Josephine Winkler, had been found dead in their rooms. A Coroner's jury had called that tragedy the result of a suicide pact.

As Riddle saw it there were three possibilities:

First, Martha Westwood had been murdered for revenge by someone—possibly a prisoner Westwood had sent to jail—who had a grudge against her husband.

Second, she had been slain for the same motive by someone who had mistaken her, in the dark, for her husband.

Third, she had been done to death for a reason as yet unknown by someone well known to the dog—possibly a member of her own household.

But the dog's failure to bark confounded the first two, and the squire's alibi the third.

Riddle's first move, therefore, was to check that alibi. He talked with Drexler, the Monaghans, Mrs. Cole and Miss Moran. Their stories bore out Westwood's. One or the other of them, they said, had been in the squire's company the whole evening.

Riddle talked to the Peytons. Bertha, the innkeeper's wife, recalled seeing Westwood at the bar at 1:50 a. m., eight minutes after the murder. Gloria Gaynor, an entertainer, had seen him at that time, too. They volunteered the information that Corporal McKee and Patrolman Gavigan of the State Highway Patrol, had been in the roadhouse about that time. The officers, questioned, said they had talked to Westwood at 1:25 a. m., only a few minutes before the shooting.

ABOUT the only fly in the ointment, as far as the squire was concerned, was Miss Moran's statement that her meeting with Westwood, Drexler and Mrs. Cole had not been the casual affair they made out, and her admission that she had spent about 15 minutes of the evening with the squire in a car parked outside the roadhouse on a petting party.

That did not appear to be serious. For Riddle soon found evidence the squire was building his wife a new home with 14 rooms and four baths at 107 Ella street. Also, that Westwood had gone to a lot of trouble to buy and hide furniture and kitchenware which Martha had admired so that it would be a surprise for her.

This last information gave Riddle a lead on another angle. The new home was being built, it developed, because a previous one at the same address had been blown up by a mysterious explosion, only a few months prior to Martha Westwood's murder. That angle looked even more promising when Riddle learned that a night life character, one Patsy, a man previously grilled in connection with no less than three murders, two bombings and many another crime of violence, was seen acting in a suspicious manner near the Westwood home within a few minutes of the murder.

Patsy was taken into custody. Two .38-caliber pistols were found on him. The guns were sent to a ballistics expert. While they were making comparisons with the bullets taken from Mrs. Westwood's body, Riddle did his best to make his captive talk.

But Patsy proved an alibi. He admitted being near the scene of the shooting, but said he was taking a drunken friend to a hotel. He produced the friend. Also, the ballistics experts sent word that Mrs. Westwood had been shot with a .32, not a .38.

Then Riddle's investigation got another kick in the pants. A lad named Sikirca came forward to say that he was probably the "tall, thin man, with black hair" that Mrs. Sehar had seen. He had been taking an early morning stroll up Clay Alley, he said, and had run back to his home, which was nearby, when he heard the shots. He said he had not come forward before for fear of political reprisal.

The Patsy and Sikirca episodes set Riddle thinking. If these two men had been spotted near the murder scene others had probably been seen there also. Further, if fear of the squire's political connections had kept Sikirca from telling a story so innocuous as his, might not that same reason be keeping other and more valuable witnesses silent?

There were only two ways to combat such a situation, and Riddle employed them both. He induced the Allegheny County Commissioners to post a $2500 reward for information. Then he went to the Rev. Dennis Kulmatysky, of nearby St. Mary's Ukrainian Catholic Church, and the Rev. W. E. Hoard of the First Presbyterian Church, and asked the clergymen to go out among their flocks and see if they could not induce confidences that the police could not.

It took 47 days for the scheme to produce. Then, through the offices of Father Kulmatysky, a steel worker named George Matuza called on Riddle. He was a neighbor of Mrs. Sehar's in Clay Alley.

He had actually seen the "tall, thin man" fire the fatal shots, dash down the steps of the Westwood back porch and run out the alley.

The tall, thin man with dark hair, he said, was Westwood!

Westwood was brought to the police station. He insisted Matuza was mistaken. He pointed to his alibi, to his friends who had all sworn he was in the Peyton roadhouse, six miles away, when the fatal shots were fired.

But the spell of fear had been broken. Matuza's courage inspired Mrs. Sehar to admit that she, too, had recognized the fleeing man as Westwood.

SHE produced her diary; under date of July 10 she had written in Polish, "I beg you, County Detective Monaghan, if someone will kill me, then take to jail Jim Westwood, because he killed his wife Martha."

Miss Moran and Mrs. Cole changed their stories. They admitted that Westwood excused himself at the door of the roadhouse at 1:35 a. m., and did not reappear until 15 minutes later.

And Peggie Moran went on to say that she and the squire had been carrying on a clandestine romance for a year and a half. Riddle made several test runs between the Peyton roadhouse and Clay Alley. At a very moderate pace, it took him only 13 minutes to cover the 12 miles there and back. That still left two minutes for the actual murder!

And then, there was the silent witness—the evidence of Buddy, the dog that hadn't barked. . . .

Westwood was arrested and indicted for his wife's murder. Drexler was indicted as an accessory.

Two days later, George Matuza, the principal eye-witness against the squire, died a horrible and mysterious death in a 65-ton forging machine at the Pittsburgh Forging Company plant. For Matuza to have been the victim of an accident or a suicide, a heavy safety device would have had to be removed from the machine. A fellow workman said the device was in place only a few moments before Matuza's mangled body was found.

His death, however, was not the setback to the State's case that was popularly believed. For on the occasion of Matuza's appearance before the grand jury, District Attorney Park had taken the precaution of recording his testimony in a sworn and witnessed deposition.

Westwood went to trial January 13, this year. Exactly two weeks later he was found guilty of his wife's murder and sentenced to life imprisonment.

No evidence that would link him with the other three mysterious deaths in his household was produced. Some say it could have been, and condemned the police accordingly. Others point at the dog-that-did-not-bark and argue that the evidence was stretched beyond reason already.

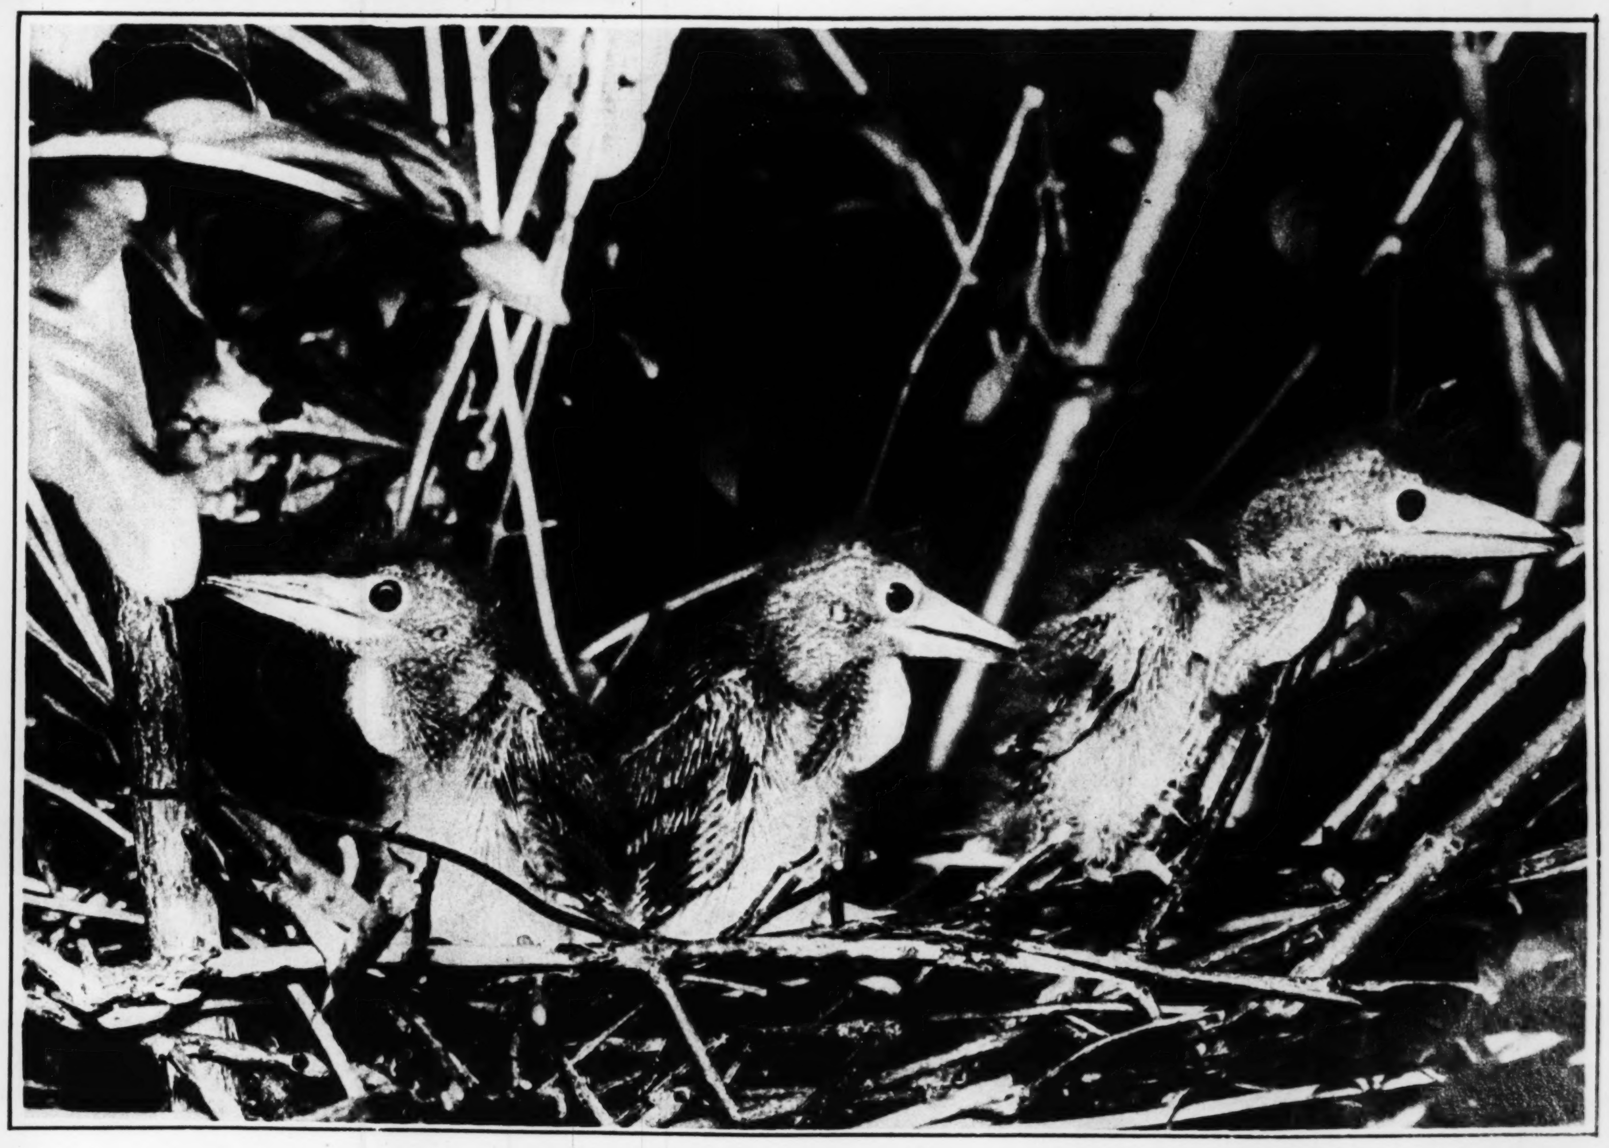
Mother take flight; a blue heron leaves the nest to the camera man.



Hardly the three graces, but rather three stages of curiosity and alarm.

1937's Biggest Event at Cosmetic Counters!

● By air-mail, wire and phone, cosmetic counters all over America have rushed to reserve their quotas of Luxor Silver Jubilee Sets!

Already millions of women have switched to Luxor Face Powder because it contains the secret that baffled skin-science for years—how to combat shine!

Luxor keeps your skin shine-free because it is proof against the damage that pore-moisture often does to face powder!

You may not see it or feel it, but any doctor will tell you that pores breathe-out a moisture onto even the driest skin. It clusters your face powder into tiny flour-like deposits—actually pulls it away from surrounding skin, and exposes the shiny surface you wanted to cover. Luxor won't mix with this moisture. Perspiration can't absorb it. That's why it clings in a smooth, uniform film so perfectly, that millions of women see a glamourous change with the first application.

It keeps your complexion, oily or dry, free of shine!

Select, today, your personal shade of Luxor Face Powder. Note the soft, cool way it spreads on. The lasting, natural glow it lends to your complexion, because pore moisture can't damage it.

Find out through Luxor's sensational Silver Jubilee Gift Offer! To win your trial of Luxor Face Powder, we give you, FREE, the 55c LUXOR SPECIAL FORMULA CREAM. Its mysterious "reversible action" brings an utterly new cleanliness to your skin!

Get your Luxor Silver Jubilee Set today.

A thrilling new cream and powder, both for the price of Luxor Face Powder alone. $1.10 value, only 55c! The complete key to exciting new beauty.

Your cosmetic counter now has its quota of Luxor Jubilee Sets. The supply is strictly limited, so get yours without delay.

HURRY WHILE THEY LAST!

"REVERSIBLE ACTION" OF NEW CREAM COMBINES PORE-CLEANING, SKIN-SOFTENING, POWDER-BASE IN ONE QUICK TREATMENT!

Your Eyes Can See it Happen!

"Prepare for mystery! Never before has anything seemed to give your skin so thrilling and thorough a cleansing as the utterly new 'reversible action' of LUXOR SPECIAL FORMULA CREAM.

"Even the tips of one's fingers thrill at the touch of this satiny-textured cream, so kind to the senses.

Cream Disappears to do its Work!

"Gone from sight, this mystery cream!

"I pause for a moment, while it goes deep into the tiny crevices of my skin, to loosen oily wastes and embedded dirt.

"I seem to feel a gentle tightening of the tissues, an exciting lift. New life seems to creep into my skin as it gives up its burden of grime and oily waste.

"It is a glorious relaxation to sit back and feel this 'mystery' cream at work!"

Then Reverses. Reappears with Dirt!

"Then I massage gently, and the cream REVERSES ITSELF—reappears in a creamy white mask loaded with impurities out of my pores. I remove this dirt-filled mask.

"A new face is revealed! Pores breathe with new life, because LUXOR SPECIAL FORMULA is a WAX-FREE CREAM! No tiny particles of wax can remain to plug the pores and rob skin of its youthful tension."

Now Skin is Radiant-Ready to Powder!

"Now my skin is radiant with a natural lively glow! It feels soft and caressable to the touch. Exactly the powder-base for a smooth, lasting, natural make-up!

"I choose LUXOR FACE POWDER because it keeps my skin shine-proof! Skin moisture can't phase it! And so, one cream, one powder, have brought me a radiant, new complexion!"

HELLMANN'S REAL MAYONNAISE
YES, I'M TRYING TO MAKE MAYONNAISE! SEEMS TO ME I CAN'T BUY ANY THAT TASTES REALLY FRESH
THEN YOU HAVEN'T BOUGHT HELLMANN'S, JANE! DON'T YOU KNOW IT'S EVEN FRESHER THAN HOME-MADE MAYONNAISE?
I DON'T BELIEVE IT! HOW CAN IT BE FRESHER?
JUST WAIT—I'LL BRING OVER A JAR FROM HOME, YOU'LL SEE FOR YOURSELF HOW MUCH FRESHER IT TASTES!

I'LL EXPLAIN, LADIES! You see, mayonnaise can't be fresher than the salad oil used in making it. Well, Hellmann's is made with "FRESH-PRESS" Salad Oil—which is fresher than any you can buy. That's why Hellmann's is fresher even than home-made mayonnaise.

We prepare "FRESH-PRESS" Salad Oil ourselves—just as we need it at the Hellmann's Kitchens. It goes into our double-whipper right away. There it is mixed with freshly broken whole eggs, our own special blend of vinegars, and choicest spices. Nothing else. No starchy fillers.

WHY, YOU'RE RIGHT, CLARA! THIS MAYONNAISE ACTUALLY DOES TASTE FRESHER THAN MY OWN HOME-MADE! I'LL CERTAINLY GET HELLMANN'S FROM NOW ON!
YOU'LL LIKE IT! I'M CONVINCED THERE'S JUST NO SUBSTITUTE FOR THE CREAMY GOODNESS OF THIS REAL MAYONNAISE MADE WITH FRESH-PRESS SALAD OIL!

Why your salads will be so much more interesting and appetizing when you change to this Real Mayonnaise made with "FRESH-PRESS" Salad Oil!

YOU can't imagine—until you taste it—the difference this mayonnaise makes in salads! For it's the freshest mayonnaise you can use. Here's why:

Have you ever stopped to think that a mayonnaise can be no fresher than the Salad Oil in it? We did. That's why Hellmann's is made with "FRESH-PRESS" Salad Oil. This is fresher salad oil than you could buy to use at home.

For we prepare it ourselves, fresh daily for each day's mayonnaise! That's why Hellmann's Real Mayonnaise is fresher—and tastes fresher—than even home-made mayonnaise.

It's far the freshest you can buy.

It's the richest and creamiest, too. Ordinary dressings can't equal it. For Hellmann's has no starchy fillers. It's all mayonnaise—with the nourishing, rich taste only real mayonnaise can possibly give.

RUSHED FRESH FROM OUR KITCHENS!

Hellmann's Real Mayonnaise is made fresh each day . . . sealed in air-tight crystal jars . . . rushed to your grocer. You get it fresh! Why not try this deliciously fresh, full-flavored Real Mayonnaise right away?

WHAT!—CONCEDE YOU THAT PUTT? —I WILL NOT! YOU'LL PLAY IT OUT!
FAW, BUNNY,— IT'S ONLY A MATTER OF INCHES FROM THE HOLE! —WHY, LAD,—I ONCE SANK A 200-YARD PUTT!
I WAS PLAYING ANGUS McHAGGIS IN SCOTLAND AND MY BALL LAY IN A REED MARSH 200 YARDS FROM THE GREEN—
WITH A PERFECTLY TIMED SWING I LIFTED THE BALL SKYWARD OUT OF THE TALL REEDS—
THEN THE BALL DROPPED DOWN INTO THE OPEN MOUTH OF A CROAKING BULLFROG—
THE ASTONISHED FROG BEGAN LEAPING OUT OF THE MARSH IN 20-FOOT HOPS TOWARD THE GREEN—THE TENTH JUMP DISLODGED THE BALL FROM ITS THROAT AND IT POPPED OUT, LANDING ON THE BACK OF A THORN-LIZARD —
WITH THE BALL IMPALED ON ITS SPINE THORNS,—
THE LIZARD RAN TO THE NEAREST HOLE, WHICH, FORTUNATELY FOR ME, WAS ON THE 18TH GREEN,— —THEREBY SINKING THE BALL AND WINNING THE GAME FOR ME!—
SAY, YOU BIG GYP! YOU'VE NUDGED YOUR BALL UP EIGHT FEET WHILE YOU WERE PULLING THAT TAFFY ON ME!

MY LITTLE BRIDE, I KNOW AUNT HETTY. SHE GAVE US THE REFRIGERATOR — PRAISE BE! — AND SHE'LL EXPECT A DESSERT MADE IN IT.
BUT DARLING, MY ICE CREAM IS ALWAYS FULL OF ICE SPLINTERS UNLESS I USE ALL CREAM. AND IF I DO...

MAGIC RECIPES

MOLLY MAGIC'S CHOCOLATE ICE CREAM

Economical—1 can makes 2 batches

1 square unsweetened chocolate
⅔ cup Eagle Brand Magic Milk
⅔ cup water
½ teaspoon vanilla
½ cup whipping cream

Melt chocolate in top of double boiler. Add Eagle Brand Magic Milk. Stir over boiling water for 5 minutes until mixture thickens. Add water and mix well. Chill thoroughly. Add vanilla. Whip cream to custard-like consistency (not until stiff—just to a foamy, fluffy thickness) and fold into chilled mixture. Pour into freezing pan. Place in freezing unit. When mixture is half frozen remove from freezing unit and beat until smooth but not melted. Smooth out and replace in freezing unit until frozen for serving. Serves 6.

THEY'RE STILL TALKING

About the Outfielder Who Stole a Home Run

The Washington Senators rush Fred Marberry to the mound to save that world series game for them and Fred burns one down the alley toward that heavy-hitting Pittsburgh Pirate, Earl Smith.

Smith looks the pitch over, likes it. He swings. Crash! It is a screaming drive to deep center field.

Running like a deer, Sam Rice, Washington center fielder, races to the center field bleacher barrier, leaps and spears that whistling clout with his gloved hand.

As he makes the catch, the great Washington fly hawk topples over the barrier into the laps of the spectators. Some claim he dropped he ball. The umpire allowed the catch.

Sam Rice saved that world series battle for the Senators Oct. 10, 1925, with one of the most remarkable catches ever seen in the great diamond classic.

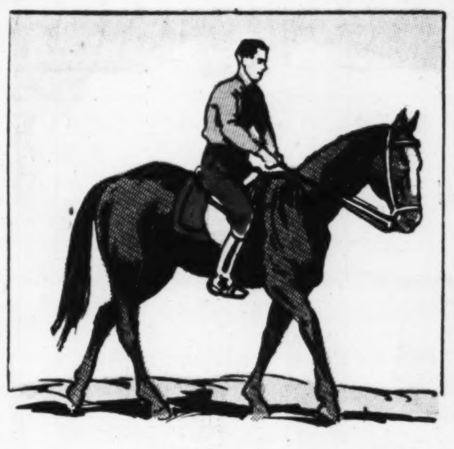
Gaits



The Walk

Collect the reins easily and apply pressure lightly with legs back of the girth. Release leg pressure and slack off on reins until horse proceeds at easy gait. To turn, hold the hand lower and slightly out toward the direction in which you are turning. Make stops gradually.

The Trot

To go from a walk to a trot, use the same methods which started the walk. Rise easily in the saddle from the knees during the pace of your mount, settling back into the saddle easily. This is called posting. Shift the body in the saddle toward the direction in which turns are made and apply the same methods used in turning at a walk.

MELVIN PURVIS
FORMER ACE G-MAN wants you to join his
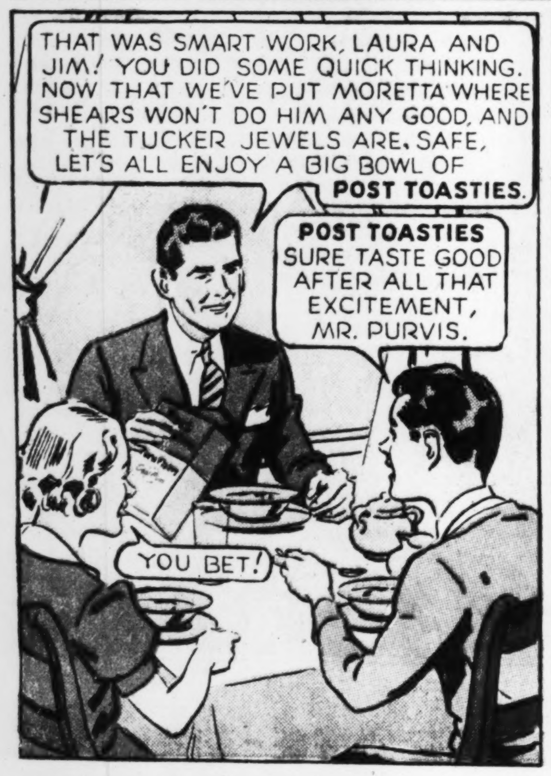
NEW 1937 CORPS OF SECRET OPERATORS

MELVIN PURVIS, former Ace G-Man who founded the Junior G-Man Corps has formed a new organization—Melvin Purvis' Law-and-Order Patrol. Members are called Secret Operators. They have special codes, passwords, and special equipment. Here is another exciting adventure, taken from the secret files and published to prove that CRIME DOES NOT PAY.

"I've been called in to investigate a mysterious jewel robbery at 'Harborview', the big Tucker estate. We're going there right now. I intend to plant you two Secret Operators on the place as Mr. Tucker's niece and nephew so you can scout around for clues without arousing suspicion!"

The Metal Detector is used to discover whether two pieces of metal come from the same original piece. Purvis put a piece of the copper screen from the Tucker home and a scrap of metal from the shears in the Metal Detector. The Metal Detector proved that the metal on the shears came from the cut screen of the Tucker bedroom.



THAT WAS SMART WORK, LAURA AND JIM! YOU DID SOME QUICK THINKING. NOW THAT WE'VE PUT MORETTA WHERE SHEARS WON'T DO HIM ANY GOOD, AND THE TUCKER JEWELS ARE SAFE, LET'S ALL ENJOY A BIG BOWL OF POST TOASTIES.
POST TOASTIES SURE TASTE GOOD AFTER ALL THAT EXCITEMENT, MR. PURVIS.

SOMETIMES IT'S BAD BREATH THAT HOLDS PEOPLE BACK, AMY. WHY DON'T YOU TALK TO MY DENTIST?
YOU SEE, MOST BAD BREATH COMES FROM DECAYING FOOD PARTICLES IN HIDDEN CREVICES BETWEEN TEETH THAT AREN'T PROPERLY CLEANED. I ADVISE COLGATE DENTAL CREAM BECAUSE ITS SPECIAL PENETRATING FOAM REMOVES THESE ODOR-BREEDING DEPOSITS.

Dentists warn: Most Bad Breath Begins with the Teeth!

Read how Colgate Dental Cream protects you!

TESTS among 2,152 men and women (of all ages and from all walks of life) prove that 76% of all people over the age of 17 have bad breath! Tests also prove that most bad breath comes from improperly cleaned teeth!

Ordinary cleansing methods, which merely polish the exposed surfaces of your teeth, fail to remove the decaying food deposits in hidden crevices between your teeth. And these deposits, tests prove, are the source of most bad breath, dull, dingy teeth, and much tooth decay.

But Colgate Dental Cream has a special penetrating foam which gets into every tiny crevice—emulsifying and washing away those food and acid deposits that cause bad breath.

At the same time, Colgate's soft, safe polishing agent gently yet thoroughly cleans and brightens enamel—makes your teeth sparkle!

So brush your teeth, gums, tongue with Colgate's at least twice daily and have cleaner, brighter teeth—sweeter, purer breath!

37 MORE EXECUTED IN SOVIET FAR EAST

Continuation of Campaign Against Wreckers Reported From Khabarovsk —131 Persons in All Killed in That Region.

RUSSIAN AIR CHIEF IS REPORTED HELD

Gen. J. I. Alksnis Not at Reception for Dr. Schmidt —Noted Pilot, Sigismund Levanevsky, Also Missing From the Scene.

By the Associated Press.

MOSCOW, June 28.—The execution of 37 more persons for sabotage in the Soviet Far East was announced today from Khabarovsk, bringing to 131 the number of persons executed in that area.

The condemned men were said to be Trotskyists, Japanese spies and "diversionists." They were convicted on charges of wrecking Soviet Far-East Railway operations. All were executed immediately after the trial, according to the June 20 issue of the Khabarovsk newspaper Pacific Star, which reached Moscow today.

Other Arrests Reported.

The unexplained absence of Gen. J. I. Alksnis, chief of the Soviet air force and Vice-Commissar of Defense, from an official welcoming party at which he ordinarily would have been present led to reports he had been arrested.

Also missing from the reception Friday for Dr. Otto Schmidt, on his return after establishing a North Pole air base, was Sigismund Levanevsky, Arctic flyer, who became well known in the United States when he flew James Mattern from Siberia to Nome, Alaska. Mattern was forced down in Siberia on his flight around the world in 1933.

The absence of the two caused foreign observers to believe the current wave of arrests in the army and in other high Soviet circles was continuing.

Official quarters, however, discounted the reports, but declined to say where Levanevsky had been since his last known flight three weeks ago. It was considered possible he might be engaged in secret preparations for a second Soviet trans-polar flight to the United States.

Third Seizure Rumored.

Alexander Arosev, president of Voks—the Society for Cultural Relations With Foreign Countries—is another whose arrest is currently rumored.

Alksnis served in the Defense Commissariat with the late War Marshal Michail Tukachevsky and had been reported in difficulty with the authorities a few days ago.

The reports died down temporarily, however, when he was drafted to sit on the court which condemned the War Marshal and seven other Soviet war lords to die for treasonable conspiracy with a foreign country.

In his ordinary course of duties as head of the air force, Gen. Alksnis would have been present at the reception for Schmidt, as would have Levanevsky because of his prominence as an airman.

Gen. Alksnis 10 days ago helped to arrange the trans-polar flight of Valeri Chekalov and his companions from Moscow to the United States and was among those who bade them farewell. Levanevsky had been expected by foreign circles to follow the trail blazed by Chekalov on a second flight to the United States.

Later Flights Planned.

It is fairly well established now, however, that other pilots are preparing for this flight, which probably will be made before mid-July. A third flight is also reported to be in prospect later in the summer.

Levanevsky had been expected to direct the first flight over the North Pole to California. The takeoff of Chekalov and his two companions caused wide surprise in Moscow.

In 1935, Levanevsky took off with two companions for a similar flight over the pole to San Francisco, but was forced to turn back by oil line trouble. He made a successful flight in 1936 from San Pedro, Cal., to Moscow in short hops by way of Alaska.
